

S0-DSD-740

To
Jesse Ellman

For General Excellence

Martin H. Linn

Principal Temple Eman. El Yorker

The Ceremonies of Judaism

By ABRAHAM Z. IDELSOHN

Professor of Jewish Music and Liturgy
Hebrew Union College

National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods
CINCINNATI

1930

COPYRIGHT, 1929 AND 1930
BY
THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF TEMPLE BROTHERHOODS

Sixth Printing

PRINTED IN U. S. A.

PREFACE

THE "Ceremonies of Judaism" was first written for and published in the Temple Brotherhood Monthly (The Jewish Layman), 1928-1929, in nine lessons. The first publication in book form was enlarged by the description of mourning ceremonies and by an introductory note on Sabbath. This present (second) edition includes two additional chapters: "Ceremonial Objects in the Synagogue" and "Prayer and Song," besides the insertion in Chapter II of the statement on the Dietary Laws.

In this presentation of the "Ceremonies of Judaism," the author does not enter into a scientific dissertation of the origins and history of the various practices; but offers a popular illustrated description, intended to familiarize the reader with the essential customs of the Jewish religion.

This publication is but a part of the program of the National Federation of Temple Brotherhoods to supply the means for spreading amongst our laity a greater knowledge of matters Jewish. The fact that the first printing of the "Ceremonies of Judaism" was exhausted within nine months after its appearance is but further proof that our laymen today are seeking knowledge about their faith, which only places the greater responsibility on the leaders of Israel to supply the material and aid in the direction of its study.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF TEMPLE BROTHERHOODS.

CONTENTS

Introduction

I. SABBATH AND FESTIVALS

Sabbath	3
The High Holiday Season	12
Rosh Hashanah	12
The Fast of Gedalia	17
The Ten Days of Penitence	18
Yom Kippur	20
Succoth	22
Simchath Torah	26
Chanukah	29
Chamishah Asar Bishvat	33
Purim	34
Pesach	38
Sefirah and Lag Baomer	45
Shabuoth	47
Tish'a Be'ab	49
The Jewish Calendar	51

II. DAILY CEREMONIES IN HOME AND SYNAGOGUE

Tzitzith	57
Tefillin	60
Mezuzah	64
Table Ceremonies	66
Dietary Laws	67

The Covering of the Head	72
The Sheitel	73
The Mizrach	74

III. CEREMONIAL OBJECTS IN THE SYNAGOGUE

Kiyor	79
Tzedokoh Box	79
Seating	80
Reading Desks: Almemor or Bema and Amud	81
Aron-hakodesh	83
Ner Tamid	84
Menorah	85
Sefer Torah	85
Organ and Choir Loft	88

IV. PRAYER AND SONG

(Pages 93 to 115)

V. CEREMONIES FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS IN THE LIFE OF THE INDIVIDUAL

Brith Milah	119
Mazal-Tov	123
Pidyon Habben	123
Shir Hamaalos	124
Bar Mitzvah	125
Chathunah	127
Mourning	132

INTRODUCTION

EVERY religion has ceremonies. Indeed there can be no creed without its forms, because a faith manifests itself through prayer and action, both of which gradually crystallise into rites, genuinely expressive of a certain group's thoughts, dreams, manner of life, and history. The time of worship and the place of worship become established. The manner of voicing and symbolizing ideas, takes definite shape. In the course of time, certain determining events in the life of the adherents of a religion, find permanent place in the religious calendar. Thus ceremonies deal at once with the profoundest ideals and the minutest habits of daily life. Only those people can appreciate them who understand the thought, the belief, the hope, or the incident for which they stand. They can be "lifeless" and "meaningless" only to those who see them with eyes but not with heart or head.

As a religion develops, changing certain attitudes, and reaching toward loftier concepts, its followers sometimes abandon the ceremonies that symbolize the out-grown notions. But mostly these customs live on, after their content is changed into a loftier ideal, reflecting a higher religious conception.

In its long history Judaism has naturally evolved a unique expression of itself, in its ceremonies.

I

THE SABBATH, THE FESTIVALS AND COMMEMORATIVE DAYS

"Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy."

These festive and commemorative days are given unto Israel to remind him of his past and to strengthen his faith.

SABBATH

THE distinguishing of the seventh day of the week is very old. The Babylonians observed the seventh, fourteenth, twenty-first, and twenty-eighth days of two months during the year. These days were called "Days of Penitence." On them, the leaders of the people were not allowed to eat meat, to drink certain beverages, to wear fine clothes, or to ride in fine carriages. In addition they were forbidden to work. The Semitic tribes considered the seventh day an ill-omened one on which no task could be successful.

In Israel, the observance of the seventh day became a permanent weekly institution. The day was designated Sabbath (cessation of work); and was ordained not only for the leaders but for the entire people, for even the slaves and the beasts of burden. Moreover, Israel changed the thought back of the day from the ominous to the happy; and substituted for the pagan notion of a day on which the gods are angry, the loftier idea that God—finishing the world on this day, and being satisfied with His creation—sanctified and blessed the day as one of rest and joy, (Genesis 2:3). In the fourth commandment (Exodus 20:8-11), the law became binding for the entire household of Israel. The inclusion of the Sabbath in the Ten Commandments gives evidence of the importance with which the institution was regarded.

The observance of the Sabbath, as it is laid down in the Bible, consisted in refraining from labour. We read of nothing else then prescribed for that day. Little by little the spiritual leaders, realizing the great value of a resting day for the spiritual elevation of a people, instituted regular assemblage, at which portions of the Pentateuch and Prophets were read and explained. Thus the day was utilized to instruct the people in their Holy Scriptures. In addition, a public service was developed, consisting of prayers and hymns chanted by the congregation and the reader. This ritual was established centuries before the destruction of the Second Temple.

In the course of the generations, the sanctity of the Sabbath became so deeply rooted in the soul of the Jewish people that no force could destroy it. Neither the Greeks nor the Romans succeeded in preventing Sabbath observance, through their many prohibitions, or under threat of the penalty of death. The Jew felt instinctively that the Sabbath is one of the foundations of his Jewish life. On this day he tried to forget all his worries, and to devote himself entirely to his spiritual elevation, to bodily relaxation and joy. During the long dark period of the Middle Ages, the Sabbath was one of the high spots which kept Israel alive—a beam of light in the thick darkness. Hence there arose the proverb: Israel could not exist without the Sabbath.

Israel's conception was: The Sabbath is given to you for your benefit; not that you should suffer on account of it. To carry out this principle, the law provided for the nullification of any or all prohibitions, in a question of saving one's life, or for the sick. No mourning nor fasting nor sadness are permitted on this day.

Sabbath abstinence from work was constantly being defined in Jewish law and practice. But the idea of what constitutes labour, changes in the course of time. Certain of the old prohibitions thus lose significance and are ignored.

BLESSING THE SABBATH LIGHTS

Boris Schatz

The Sabbath provides for both spirit and body. It is a means by which the Jew is given entirely to his faith, to his people, and to his family. The way in which the Jewish people observed the Sabbath, changed but little (until modern times) in the last eighteen centuries.

THE EVE OF SABBATH

On Friday morning, preparations started: the making of the special food; the cleaning of the house. From oldest times, the Jews have celebrated their festivals with special lights. The obligation to kindle the Sabbath lights rested on the women. Thus, on Friday evening before sunset, the wife

Ceremonies of Judaism

lights the candles (minimum two), or kindles the Sabbath oil-lamp, and recites a special benediction. Many artistic forms of Sabbath lamps have been created. They are usually pendant metal bowls to contain the oil, with small projecting

M. Oppenheim

FRIDAY EVENING BLESSING BY THE FATHER

spouts to hold the tapers, or candelabras with three or more arms. Many use ornamented silver, copper or brass candlesticks.

After the kindling of the lights, in the old homes, the table is set for the evening meal; and the women attire themselves in Sabbath garments. Meanwhile the male members of the family are in the Synagogue "to receive the Sabbath."

Sabbath and Festivals

This special service is called Kabbalath Shabbath, the receiving of Queen Sabbath. The ritual consists of seven Psalms and a hymn "Lechah dodi," followed by the regular evening service with some special insertions. Distinctive tunes for this service were created in the course of centuries, notably those for "Lechah dodi" (about two thousand melodies!) This number of compositions for a single poem is unique in musical literature.

When the father of the household returns home from the Synagogue, he blesses his wife and children. Then the family sings Shalom Alechem, a hymn built on a statement in the Talmud that two angels of peace accompany each man home from the Synagogue, and remain with him and his family all the Sabbath day. The father recites Proverbs 31: 10-31, that beautiful eulogy of woman. Then the family is seated at table and the father recites the Sanctification (Kiddush) over bread and wine (fermented or unfermented). In the spirit of home celebration of the Sabbath, certain chosen articles of food came to be associated with the day, and to be distinctive of it. When a famous Rabbi was once asked by a Roman noble, how it was that the Jewish Sabbath food is supposed to be so tasty, the Rabbi replied: We have a certain spice which we put into our food. This spice is called "The Observance of the Sabbath." Sabbath bread, called Challah, usually a twisted white loaf, was always prepared and baked at home. The first dish served was fish. The use of fish for Sabbath is very old. We find it mentioned in Nehemiah 13:16. Later a symbolic meaning was attached to it. Israel was compared to fish that persist though persecuted. The next dish was soup with noodles, Lokshen, and the third, Tzimmes (carrots and potatoes mixed with sugar and oil or meat fat).

Ceremonies of Judaism

Between the courses, table songs—Zemiroth are sung. The meal concludes with the singing of Shir Hamaaloth (Psalm 126) and the chanting of Grace—Benshen (the Latin “Benedictio” Germanized). The custom of singing table-songs, Zemiroth, dates back to long before the destruction of the Second Temple. During the course of twenty centuries, these songs added light and joy to the Jewish soul on Sabbath. A rich collection of songs was created, mostly in Hebrew, the content of which is the glorification of the Sabbath, of the Torah and of Israel’s spiritual heritage. In recent years several of them have been translated into English. Zemiroth singing is a custom that cannot be allowed to die, for it enriches our soul with its gentle joyous piety.

In the modern homes in this country, the participation of women in all the religious functions, has somewhat shifted the order of the ritual. For instance, the kindling of the Sabbath candles is usually done at the Sabbath table, in the presence of the united family. After the meal, men and women together attend the religious service. Many congregations have abandoned the Kabbalath Shabbath service for the late after-supper worship. This service, attended by men and women, young and old, observed in the leisure after the evening meal, has proved of great religious influence.

SATURDAY

On Saturday morning there are Synagogue services in which the reading of the Pentateuch (Torah) and Prophets (Haftarah) occupies the central place. The Torah is read from a Scroll (Sefer-Torah), made of parchment upon which the writing is done by hand, as in ancient times. (See page 85). In the Reform Synagogue, the Hagiographa is also read as Haftarah.

BESAMIM-BOX
(H. U. C. Museum)

After the service is over the family takes the main meal, at which a special dish is served, called Chalent, from the French “chaleur”: warmth, warm food. Since no cooking or fire-making was permissible on Sabbath, people used to prepare the Sabbath meal on Friday, and set it into an oven kept hot with glowing coals. The Chalent consists of a meat soup with barley and potatoes, and of the famous Kugel (German, meaning “Ball”), that is, noodle or bread pudding. Zemiroth are sung and the meal is concluded with the singing of Shir Hamaaloth and the chanting of grace.

After the meal it was customary for the father to examine his sons in their Jewish studies and to repeat with them the weekly portion of the Pentateuch, chanted according to the Neginoth called Trop (from the Latin tropus). This chant, part of the most genuine music of ancient Israel, the Reform Synagogue has unfortunately abolished.

For the women a special literature was created in Yiddish: popular presentations of Midrashic and ethical literature. It was their only instruction, which they read with great interest every Saturday afternoon. These old Jewish homes presented an inspiring picture, Saturday afternoon—every member of the family either reading or studying.

Sabbath afternoon the people reassembled in the Synagogue where, often, a popular lecturer or preacher (Maggid) would hold discourse on a religio-ethical theme, after which the Minchah service was read. Upon the return home, the "third meal" (Shalosh Seudoth) was served.

M. Oppenheim

SABBATH AFTERNOON

THE OUTGOING OF SABBATH

At sunset, men re-assembled in the unlighted Synagogue, where the congregation would chant Psalms in responsive form. The yearning note of the melody, together with the semi-darkness of the Synagogue, created a mysterious atmosphere, reminiscent of one's feelings at the departure of a dear friend. Then the evening service (Maarib) was intoned in the week-day tune. At the conclusion of it, either the Chazzan or the Shammash kindled the Habdalah candle and, over the wine, chanted the Habdalah (Separation) benediction; that is, the "Separation" between the Sabbath and the week-days, between the sacred and the profane. This ceremony was then repeated by each householder at his home, where in addition, a benediction over spices was recited. The spices were kept in a special box artistically worked in gold, silver or other metal, called Besamin-box. This custom was introduced with the purpose of delighting the yearning spirit at the moment when the beloved Sabbath is departing. Much artistry is displayed also in the making of the wax "Habdalah" candles.

Sabbath and Festivals

The Habdalah ceremony included a custom of turning one's hands toward the light of the candle and of reciting a benediction for the creation of artificial light, when the spiritual light, Sabbath, is leaving us.

Before the kindling of the light at the outgoing of Sabbath, the women used to chant in Yiddish "Got Fun Avrohom," a prayer that the coming week be a happy and prosperous one.

HABDALAH

H. Struck

YOMIM NORAIM

(The High Holidays)

THE season of the High Holidays begins, in the Orthodox congregations, with Elul, the month before Rosh Hashanah. Throughout the month, every day after the morning service, the Shofar is blown (Tekiah-Shevarim-Teruah-Tekiah) to prepare the people for the coming Days of Awe (Yomim Noraim). In Oriental congregations, it is customary, during the entire month, to rise early and, before sunrise, to recite supplications (Selichoth). European Jews observe this custom for only a few days.

ROSH HASHANAH

The Jewish religious year starts with the first day of the Jewish month Tishri, which as a rule falls between the middle of September and the beginning of October. In Bible times, the political year in Israel started with the Spring month Nissan; and Tishri is recorded in the Bible as the seventh month. Leviticus 23:24 says: "In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall be a solemn rest unto you, a memorial proclaimed with the blast of horns, a holy convocation." The Bible does not explain what is meant by memorial, and what the contents of that holiday were. In Numbers 29:1-6 the day is called a day of the blowing of the horn. We presume that since the Jewish religious calendar started with the month of Tishri, the idea of the "day of blowing of the horn" can be understood as the announcement of the New Year. The religious idea attached to the day was that of memorial, that is, on that day God considers every individual in the world, carefully weighing the merits and shortcomings of his deeds. Later the idea of Judgment was increasingly emphasized, until Rosh Hashanah became a day of awe. On it each person sought to set himself right before God. If God is the Judge in whose hand is life and death, He is thus the Ruler of the world. Therefore much stress was laid upon the proclamation of God as the only Ruler of the world—an idea which was worked out in most beautiful language and style in the Hebrew prayers for the day.

The High Holidays

SHOFAROTH (H. U. C. Museum)

THE SHOFAR BLOWER

Rosh Hashanah is one of those Jewish holidays in which the idea of the individual is emphasized. As Ruler and Judge, God makes no distinction between nations and religious groups. On that day He considers every human being regardless of his nationality. Rosh Hashanah is bound to neither nation nor locality.

The idea of the Day of Judgment produced a special liturgy and special customs. The nucleus of this liturgy was created already at the time when the Second Temple still existed in Jerusalem.

A mystic significance was attached to the custom of Blowing the Shofar. In ancient times the blasts of the horn were believed to have the power of driving away evil spirits. To convert this pagan notion into a higher religious idea, the Jewish sages said that the Shofar is blown to remind us of the intended sacrifice of Isaac, for—according to tradition—

The High Holidays

Abraham attempted to sacrifice Isaac on that very day on the spot where the Jerusalem Temple was later erected. Since by the command of God, a ram was substituted for Isaac (see Genesis, 22), the sages explained that the blowing of a ram's horn would remind us of God's providence. Later the Jewish philosophers Saadia and Maimonides introduced the still loftier concept that the sound of the Shofar has the unique quality of penetrating into the human soul and causing the heart to tremble. The blowing of the Shofar in the service was, according to Rabbinic prescription, divided into four sections, totaling one hundred calls. Three sections have thirty calls each, and the fourth has ten calls. The sounds of the Shofar are these: 1. Tekiah, one sustained tone ending abruptly on the fourth or fifth note above the sustained tone; 2. Shevarim, three groups of two notes each, each making the step of a fourth or fifth; 3. Teruah, nine very short disconnected (staccato) notes, or a tremulo on one tone. After the blowing of these three different calls, the Tekiah is repeated. Each of these calls irrespective of the number of its tones, was considered a unit (one blast). The calls are executed according to this scheme: The group Tekiah-Shevarim-Teruah-Tekiah is rendered three times (total, twelve calls); then the group Tekiah-Shevarim-Tekiah three times

(nine calls); and finally Tekiah-Teruah-Tekiah thrice (nine calls). The sum of these three groups is thirty. This succession of thirty calls, blown three times, amounts to ninety. To complete the hundred, a final group of ten is added in the order: 1. Tekiah-Shevarim-Teruah-Tekiah; 2. Tekiah-Shevarim-Tekiah; 3. Tekiah-Teruah-Tekiah. The last Tekiah of each of the four sections is prolonged and is called Tekiah gedolah—The big Tekiah.

Ceremonies of Judaism

For the construction of a Shofar, a ram's horn is first softened by boiling; then scraped inside, that its hollow may be smooth; and finally well hardened that it may be vibrant. Frequently it is beautified with surface carvings. At best, it can produce but a few tones—these not of musical quality but of the nature of signals.

No member of the Jewish household, man or woman, was permitted to taste of food at noon on Rosh Hashanah, unless he had heard the Shofar. For people confined to their beds, the Shofar was carried to the sick room and blown in private houses. In case Rosh Hashanah falls on Sabbath the blowing of the Shofar is omitted in the Orthodox Synagogue, because it is considered labour.

For two days' celebration of Rosh Hashanah, see a later treatment on Calendar.

The special greeting of Jew to Jew on Rosh Hashanah is the formula: "May you be inscribed for a good year" (Leshonoh tovoh tikosev, plural: tikosevu).

Special items of diet became associated with the Rosh Hashanah meal. Honey was set onto the table, and the bread was dipped into it, while the head of the house pronounced the words: "May it be His will that this year be a sweet one." The special loaves of white bread were formed round and smooth, as a symbol of the desire that the year too be smooth and round.

In about the tenth or eleventh century, the custom of Tashlich arose. On the first day of Rosh Hashanah after the afternoon service, the congregation would go to the edge of

The High Holidays

Stryowski in Jew. Encyc. Vol. XII

TASHLICH CEREMONY IN GALICIA

a river, lake, sea or any flowing water—there to recite a ritual concluding: “May God cast our sins into the depths of the sea.” The men would shake the ends of their coats and their sleeves, as though brushing off their sins. The name of the ceremony, Tashlich, means “casting off.” The custom survives to this day in Orthodox circles, despite the opposition of many prominent rabbis.

THE FAST OF GEDALIA

commemorates a historical event mentioned in II Kings 25:22-25. Gedalia had been appointed Governor of Palestine after the destruction of the First Temple; but on the day following Rosh Hashanah he was killed; and with him the independence of the Jewish people was wiped out. Hence on the day succeeding Rosh Hashanah, pious Jews fast and hold a special service, the distinctive prayers of which are supplications (Selichoth).

Ceremonies of Judaism

THE TEN DAYS OF PENITENCE

The period from the first day of Rosh Hashanah until Yom Kippur (which falls on the tenth of Tishri) is called the Ten Days of Penitence (Asereth Yemey Teshuvah). During this period pious Jews used to fast every day until sunset. Long before sunrise every night they gathered (and many Orthodox Jews still gather) for special supplications (Selichoth).

On the day before Yom Kippur, the custom called Kapporos (ransom) was observed. The idea back of this custom is very old. In ancient times people sacrificed animals, believing that instead of offering their own bodies, they were substituting animals. During the time of the Temple, on every Yom Kippur a scape-goat (Azazel) was sent from the Temple into the desert, to carry away the sins of the people (Leviticus 16:22). After the destruction of the Second Temple, it was impossible to continue the sending of a goat; and the people felt that they had no means of offering a ransom. They created a substitute in the form of Kapporos. They chose for their ransom a fowl, usually a chicken, upon the head of which each person laid his sins; and, while swinging the chicken above his head three times, he recited: "The chicken is my substitute and my ransom, and shall be killed that I may survive for a long and peaceful life." White chickens were preferable because white symbolized purity and innocence. Women would select hens, and men roosters. After the ceremony, the fowl was killed and cooked, and served at the meal on the Eve of Yom Kippur. If lack of sufficient funds prevented the purchase of fowl, a few coins given to charity would constitute a substitute atonement. The formula of the recitation was then changed thus: "The coin is my substitute and my ransom and shall be given for charity that I may survive," etc. In spite of the strong opposition of many famous rabbis throughout the centuries, this custom still survives.

The High Holidays

An hour before sunset on the Eve of Yom Kippur, Jews partake of the Seudah Hammafseketh (cessation-meal), that is the end of all eating until about an hour after sunset of the following day. The meal has special dishes associated with it. There are breads formed in the shape of ladders, as a symbol that our prayers should ascend. Kreplach, small pieces of noodle-dough folded in triangular form and stuffed with ground meat, are served in the soup.

As the day before Yom Kippur is considered a festival, candles are lit at the cessation meal, and the benediction

L. Pilichowski

SCH'MA YISROEL

Ceremonies of Judaism

recited as on the eve of the festivals. After the meal, long candles are lit, intended to last throughout the twenty-four hours. In days when each household prepared its own candles much care and ingenuity were expended in moulding and braiding the Yom Kippur candles.

After the meal, it was customary for the father to bless the children, his wife, and all the members of his household. Then the family (excluding babies) would prepare itself to go to the Synagogue. All would walk to the Synagogue in stockings or slippers, as a symbol of humility and suffering.

Before the beginning of the service, which started before sunset, each Jew sought forgiveness of anyone whom he had wronged, for Jewish doctrine teaches that the Day of Atonement does not atone for wrongs done to one's neighbor, unless the neighbor's forgiveness be obtained; and that there is no atonement before God until atonement before man be accomplished.

At the entrance of the Synagogue, there were plates for charity (Kaaroeth); and every one would drop into them as much as he was able to give.

THE EVE OF YOM KIPPUR

Before the Kol Nidre service started every man put on a white robe called Kittl, and wrapped himself in the Tallith. These two garments the men wore all through the fast day. The Kittl was used not only for Yom Kippur, but also for the Passover Seder and for burial. Its use on Yom Kippur was intended as a reminder of death. At the opening of the service the curtains of the Ark are drawn, the Scrolls are taken out, and the Chazzan sings that wonderful, awesome, inspiring tune Kol Nidre, from which the entire evening service takes its name.

The High Holidays

THE DAY OF ATONEMENT—YOM KIPPUR

In the religious calendar, Yom Kippur (Lev. 16:29-34) to the Jew is the most sacred of days, one devoted entirely to prayer and meditation. All the household of Israel refrains from physical work and enjoyment, and from nourishment. Even washing with soap is avoided by Jews of the old school. Many pious Jews used to remain in the Synagogue twenty-four hours standing on their feet, reading and praying without interruption. Yom Kippur, like Rosh Hashanah, is universalistic in appeal. The final service of Yom Kippur concludes with a prolonged call on the Shofar: Tekiah-Shevarim-Teruah-Tekiah gedolah. In some congregations only one Tekiah is blown.

At the end of the day, it is customary for one to greet the other with the wish: "A happy New Year, and a good sealing," that is the sealing of the divine decree concerning each life, for the period of the year just beginning.

After the service in the Orthodox Synagogue, the Chazzan recites Habdalah over wine. (For details of this ceremony, see the treatment on Sabbath ceremonies.) Every householder, on his return home, was accustomed to repeat the ceremony, after which he went into his yard and started building the Succah, in order to begin the New Year with some pious deed.

Then followed the "Anbeissen," the breaking of the fast. Everyone was in high spirits, confident that a happy year had been granted him.

SUCCOTH

(The Feast of Booths)

FOUR days after Yom Kippur, on the fifteenth of Tishri, begins Succoth. The name means booths. According to Leviticus 23:42 the booth commemorates the life of the Israelites in the desert after leaving Egypt. The holiday was called also the Harvest Festival because, according to the Bible (Deuteronomy 16:13-15) it was celebrated after the people had finished their harvesting. The festival of Succoth lasts eight successive days, seven of which are Succoth proper, while the eighth is observed as a Concluding Festival called Shemini Atzereth.

Succoth is designated as a festival of joy; and is distinguished by several colorful and meaningful customs. In the first place, there is the Succah, a booth covered with green branches completely severed from the trees. It must be not less than seven fists (about four feet) in length and in width, and not higher than twenty cubits (about 25 feet). Inside, the Succah is decorated with fruits of different types. This task is the obligation of the women.

In this Succah the men were obliged to take all their meals; and they were commanded to dwell in it during the week of the festival, unless forced indoors by rain or extreme cold. Women were exempted from this obligation. Nevertheless, no woman ever took the liberty of eating elsewhere than in the Succah. Happy hours were spent there during the week, in song and rejoicing and also in study. Men considered it a duty to read the Talmudic portions dealing with the laws and regulations of this festival.

Succoth—The Feast of Booths

THE SUCCAH

M. Oppenheim

During the Medieval ages, the Succah was interpreted as a symbol of simplicity, frailty, and humility. Rich and poor were urged to abandon their residence and to move to the booth. Its frailness stimulated them to think of life as a temporary sojourn and of prosperity and poverty as likewise temporary.

Next in importance to the Succah is the group of the Four Species: Ethrog (a citron); Lulab (a shoot of a palm tree in its folded state before the leaves are spread out); Hadassah (three twigs of myrtle); Aravah (two willow branches). These four species are mentioned already in the Pentateuch, Leviticus 23:40.

During the period of the Second Temple, the people with these four species in their hands used to march in procession around the altar singing: "I beseech Thee, O Lord, grant salvation; I beseech Thee, O Lord, grant prosperity." After the destruction of the Second Temple this custom was transplanted into the Synagogue, where it survives to the present day, under the name Hakafoth (circuits).

The three species are arranged in this way: a triple holder of braided palm leaves supports the Lulab in the center, the Hadassah to its right, and the Aravah to its left. The

I. Kaufmann

CHASSIDIC BOY HOLDING LULAB
AND ETHROG

Ethrog is kept separate. The origin of the use of these, we do not know with certainty. The rabbis devised an ethical interpretation, according to which the four species represent four types of men: the proud (Lulab), the humble (Aravah), the one with beautiful qualities, but without good deeds (Hadassah). The highest type, the one whose virtuous deeds have an influence upon others, the rabbis liken to the fine perfume of the Ethrog. The combining of these, symbolizes the brotherhood of the human race.

Jewish artistic instinct manifested itself in creating wonderful containers for the Ethrog, worked in gold, silver, or other metals. These gave expression to the devotion of the Jew to the religious ideals embodied in this symbol.

Succoth is designated in the Bible as the "Season of our rejoicing." Originally in Palestine, it marked a final Thanksgiving celebration after the completion of harvesting. Though conditions have changed, the expression is retained: "Season of our rejoicing." Indeed, for us today, there is the same vitality in the idea of humility expressed through the Succah; in the significance ascribed to the four species; in the great principles of genuine thanksgiving.

Succoth—The Feast of Booths

The seventh day of Succoth is called Hoshanah Rabbah (the great salvation). According to old tradition the final sealing of the decree (see Yom Kippur) is not completed on Yom Kippur but on this day. Consequently, in addition to the Succoth significance, this day received a sanctity akin to the spirit of the High Holidays. During the night of this festival a watch takes place, on which a special ritual is recited. Its morning service was created of parts of the Yom Kippur prayers fused with parts of the Succoth service. It contains both supplications and the Hallel. After the reader and worshippers encircle the synagogue platform seven times with the four species in their hands, everybody lays aside the four species and takes a bunch of willows (called, in consequence, Hoshanah) with which he beats the bench

BLESSING OF THE LULAB AND ETHROG

Ceremonies of Judaism

or floor three times, while calling: "A voice proclaims good tidings." As a sign of reminiscence of the High Holidays, the chazzan wears the Kittl and sings many High Holiday tunes. At the meal, the "ladder" bread, Kreplach and honey are served.

On the eighth day, Shemini Atzereth (The eighth day of convocation), a special prayer is offered, called Tefillath Geshem—Prayer for rain. It was instituted in Palestine, where, after a half-year of drought, rain starts in Fall, and continues throughout the Winter until Spring. The solemnity of this prayer is expressed by the chazzan's wearing the Kittl, as well as by a special tune, "the Dew and Rain tune."

After the morning service, people take leave of the Succah; and all the fruit and decorations which adorned it are given to the children, or to charity.

SIMCHATH TORAH

The evening of this day and the day following are called Simchath Torah (Rejoicing over the Law). This festival, though the latest instituted (about the ninth or the tenth century), has nonetheless achieved equal sanctity with those festivals dating from Biblical times. The underlying idea of it is unique. It is dissociated from any special locality and from all primitive religious conceptions. It voices the pure joy and love and sense of privilege which the Jew feels for being in possession of the Torah. On this day the annual cycle of weekly readings of the Pentateuch in the Synagogue is completed and immediately begun anew, as a symbol that the Jew should never finish reading the Torah. After the evening service, all the Scrolls are taken out of the Ark and a lighted candle placed in it to substitute the Torahs—symbol of light. The members of the congregation are honored with the privilege of carrying the Scrolls. They form a procession (Hakafoth), with the Chazzan at the head, and encircle the synagogue auditorium seven times, chanting special hymns for the occasion, singing joyous religious folk songs, the texts of which deal with the Torah.

Succoth—The Feast of Booths

THE PROCESSION WITH LULAB AND ETHROG

The children are encouraged to participate in the joyous celebration. They are presented with special paper flags, printed in Hebrew, with the words: "The crown of the Torah." These and illuminated lanterns, they carry in lines following the procession (Hakafoth) of the adults. And they join the singing of their elders. The following day the same circuit is repeated.

During the reading of the last portion of the Pentateuch every member of the congregation is called upon to recite the benediction over the Torah. After every man has had an opportunity, all boys under thirteen are called in a group before the Torah; an adult recites the benediction with them, while covering them with his Tallith. The congregation then rises and recites Gen. 48:16.

Ceremonies of Judaism

A prominent member of the congregation is called upon to finish the Pentateuch. This man is called Chathan Torah—the bridegroom of the Torah. Special prayers are recited for him by the reader; and the congregation honors him by chanting aloud: "Chazak, chazak venithchazak," "Be strong and fortified in your championing of the Torah."

Immediately after the Torah is concluded, another prominent member is invited to begin the new cycle of reading with the opening section of the Pentateuch. He receives the title Chathan Bereshith—bridegroom of Genesis.

At the end of the service, the Chathan Torah usually invites the congregation to his home for a banquet, at which occasion the celebration of the day reaches its climax, through joyous Simchath Torah songs, and toasts of religious content.

HAKAFOTH OF SIMCHATH TORAH

CHANUKAH

(The Feast of Lights)

CHANUKAH commemorates the victory of an ideal over brutality, spiritual independence over despotism, light over darkness. A handful of Jews, conscious of the high value of their spiritual culture, their religion, dared open fight against the overwhelming power of the Syrian King, Antiochus Epiphanes, who aimed to crush their faith in the one God, and to suppress the ritual and ceremonies created by the Jewish people to give voice to its beliefs.

In the year 162 B. C. E. King Antiochus Epiphanes ordered that a pagan altar be set up in the Temple in Jerusalem and that sacrifices be offered to the Greek idol Zeus Olympus. After hard struggle and bitter battles, in which many Jewish heroes lost their lives on the battlefield, the pious ones under the leadership of Judas the Hasmonean, or Maccabeus, achieved victory after victory, until he reconquered Jerusalem, drove out the Syrians and their Jewish sympathizers, and purified the Temple from the Zeus cult.

This purification occurred on the 25th of the Jewish month Kislev. The altar was sanctified and dedicated anew, lamps and torches kindled as a symbol of spiritual light and freedom, and a celebration of eight days ordained, during which the illumination continued amid sacrifices and songs. This feast was decreed by Judas Maccabeus and the elders of Israel to be celebrated annually, and was called Chanukah—"Feast of Dedication," also "Festival of Lights." There is a Talmudic legend that all the oil in the Temple was polluted by the pagan worshippers, and that upon investigation only one cruse of consecrated oil was found by the Hasmoneans, untouched, sealed and hidden away. This cruse was used to illuminate the Temple. Its oil lasted, by miracle, for eight days.

Ceremonies of Judaism

The story of Chanukah has been preserved in the first four chapters of the first book of the Maccabees (in the Apocrypha) and in the "Scroll Antiochus" (Megillath Antiochus), printed in many Orthodox prayerbooks.

In the morning service of each of the eight days, "Hallel" (Psalms 113-118) is recited, a portion of the Pentateuch (Numbers 7) is read, also a paragraph briefly sketching the story of Chanukah. In the evenings oil lamps or waxen candles are lit. Originally these lights used to be set outdoors as a manifestation of the victory of light over darkness. But through fanatical Medieval oppression the Jews were forced to keep their lights indoors. They had to be content to set them in the windows. Originally big flames were kindled, but Medieval tyranny reduced them to tiny sparks. However, they were never extinguished by all the violent storms which raged against Judaism throughout the ages.

The lights are lit in the Synagogue as well as in each private home. Starting with one light on the first evening, the number is increased by one each evening, until on the eighth night there are eight lights. This progression is a symbol of Judaism's belief in the gradual constant increase of intellectual light and of the slow but steady victory of spiritual enlightenment. Lovingly and beautifully has Jewish art molded and ornamented the Chanukah lamp or candelabra.

At the kindling of the lights special benedictions are recited for the miracles which God showed to our forefathers at this season. Then the hymn "Mooz tzur" or "Rock of Ages," the English adaptation thereof, is sung, according to a melody popular among the German Jews since the 16th century. Though the elements of this tune are German, the melody is not found in this form in the German folksong. While the lights burn, no work is permitted. Jews are accustomed to indulge in games and in the eating of latkes (pancakes). Children play with a revolving top or die, called Dreidle or Trendle (from the German drehen). This die has on its four sides Hebrew letters: נ, ה, ג, and ש which had a twofold meaning, the one in Hebrew: nes gadol hayah sham ("A great miracle happened there"), and the German one: nichts, ganz, halb, stell (nothing, all, half, put), indicating the gains and losses in the play. The children usually receive presents from their parents, relatives and friends ("Chanukah Gelt" or "Chanukah Geshenk").

Chanukah—The Feast of Lights

CHANUKAH LAMP—Courtesy, A. M. Burd, Germantown, Pa.
Designed and made by Reuben Leaf, New York City.

With the strengthening of Jewish self-consciousness in the last few decades, Chanukah has assumed an importance in the Jewish calendar commensurate with its historical and religious significance. This festival buoys up the Jew's spirit that he may withstand the waves of assimilation; that his eyes may not be blinded by the gilded splendour of false gods; that, being a small minority in an overwhelming majority, he be not made timid, that he may not underestimate his own spiritual culture in the face of that vast culture surrounding and engulfing him. Inspired by the message of this festival the Jew must champion the truth of his religion, that which made the Maccabees conquer Syrianized Hellenism, and which, ever since, has kindled in the hearts of millions of the human race the eternal light of the Jewish faith.

TRENDLE

CHAMISHAH ASAR BISHVAT

THIS day occurs six weeks after Chanukah on the fifteenth of the Jewish month Shevat. The Mishna called it the "New Year of the Trees." In Palestine the day marks the beginning of the season of the budding of the trees and the planting of fruit trees. The Jews in the Diaspora designated the day for enjoying fruits native to Palestine, usually the carob (St. Jacob's bread) which, as the cheapest, is accessible even to the poor. The festival character of this day is marked in the orthodox ritual by the omitting of the supplicational prayers in the morning and in the afternoon service. The newly established colonies in Palestine made the day an "arbor day." In 1913 there was introduced into the Jewish public schools in Palestine the custom that the children march out into the fields to plant trees and to celebrate the "New Year" by eating fruit and singing special songs. The celebration of the day has been carried into many Jewish schools in other countries, used as means by which to strengthen the sentiments for Palestine in the heart of the youth.

PURIM

(The Feast of Lots)

THE Thirteenth of Adar (in a leap year, Second Adar—Adar Sheni) is the Fast of Esther—Taanith Esther. The evening of that day and the whole of the day following, constitute Purim—the Feast of Lots. Both days commemorate the Jews' escape from impending doom, as related in the Biblical book of Esther.

Unbeknown to her royal husband Ahasuerus, Esther—Queen of Persia—was a Jewess. Her cousin, Mordecai, by reason of his loyalty to his faith, had incurred the ill-will of a certain Haman, then in high favor at court. With a vengeance so often repeated in Jewish history, Haman retaliated against the one hated Jew, by scheming the extermination of Mordecai's whole people, the Jews. He purchased a royal decree for their wholesale slaughter, justifying his act by the indictment that "their laws are different from those of every people; neither keep they the king's laws." Discovering the plot for the apparently inescapable massacre of the Jews, Mordecai importunes Esther to risk her life, disclose her identity to the king, and plead for her people's deliverance. After a day of fasting (hence the Fast of Esther), the queen approaches Ahasuerus. The treachery of Haman is disclosed, past unrequited service of Mordecai is brought to light; and with oriental pagantry the righteous are saved.

Jew. Encyc.

HAMAN-DREHERS

Purim—The Feast of Lots

Purim—is considered a Galuth (Exile) Feast, that is a celebration in which the episodes just related stand as symbol of all the struggles of the Jewish people among the nations; of all the accusations, misrepresentations, tribulations, and dangers, suffered because we are repeatedly decried as "different from every people." While Purim is called a half-holiday, the Talmud declares that, though traditional festivals be neglected, Purim will never vanish—meaning that events celebrated by other special days may lose their reality, but that the sad events that created a Purim recur ever and again, and are poignantly meaningful.

Purim was observed already several centuries before the destruction of the Second Temple. It is mentioned in II Maccabees, 15:43.

On the evening of the thirteenth of Adar, the Megillah—the parchment scroll

Illuminated Megillah in Silver Case Illustrating
the Story of Esther.
(H. U. C. Collection)

ILLUMINATED MEGILLAH (H. U. C. Library)

containing the book of Esther—is read in the synagogue. The traditional chant employed for it, is colorful and unique. The reading is interrupted at every mention of the name of Haman by the raucous whirring and buzzing of the Haman-dreher or Klapper, in the hands of the young people. After the reading, the Hebrew song Shoshanath Yaakov is chanted. In the morning after the service the reading of the Megillah is repeated.

Purim—The Feast of Lots

The home table differentiates the day by serving Kreplach and the special triangular poppy-seed cakes called Homon-tashen (literally: Haman-pockets). The German name for poppy-seed, Mohn, was associated with Homon or Haman.

The day was always dedicated to the remembering of the poor, and to the sending of gifts: Shalach manoth to friends. Since Talmudic times, Purim has been a day of gaiety, the one day in the year, on which the Jew permitted himself to indulge in banqueting and joy. He would burn Haman in effigy, remembering so many contemporary Hamans. From early performances of comedies based upon the story of Esther, the "Purim Plays" gradually developed.

Often fine artistry was displayed in the Megillah—drawings and paintings of scenes of the book of Esther, in its margins; carving in silver and wood for its case.

Purim in this country, has been a day for rehearsing its dramatic tale among the children, and for masque-dances among young and old. There is a noticeable increase in its use again as a day of gift giving. We should not let the distinctive chant of the Megillah be lost to us!

The day following is called Shushan-Purim, because (according to Esther 9:18-19) in Susa, the Persian capital, Purim was celebrated a day later. In commemoration of that belated observance, Purim is kept on the 15th of Adar in cities which are surrounded with a wall. In Jerusalem this custom is observed to the present time.

PESACH

(Passover)

PESACH is one of the most significant Jewish festivals. It commemorates Israel's liberation from Egyptian bondage and his becoming a free people awakened to the determination to serve none but the One God. The festival is, therefore, called Zeman cheruthenu—the season of our Liberty.

Pesach starts on the evening of the fourteenth of Nissan, and lasts for seven days. On account of the uncertainty of the old Jewish calendar, an eighth day was added, which was retained even after the calendar was stabilized (see Calendar). This additional eighth day has been abolished by the Reform group in America.

The name Pesach means "pass over"; and refers to the account in Exodus 12, that when the angel of death killed the first born of the Egyptians, he "passed over" the houses of the Israelites, which had all been carefully marked with a sprinkling of lamb-blood on the doorposts. In commemoration of this "passing over" every householder of ancient Israel was required to slaughter a lamb on the evening of the fourteenth of Nissan, pour its blood upon the altar of the Temple and roast its meat for his family's food. Another name of the festival: Chag hammatzoth—the Feast of Unleavened Bread—grows out of the Biblical narrative of the manner in which the Israelites—driven in haste out of Egypt—carried with them, dough still unleavened. As a yearly remembrance of this emergency, the people were commanded to eat only unleavened bread for one entire week. In order that destitute Jews be enabled to fulfill this command, funds, Maoth chittim, have always been collected before Pesach for the purchase of matzoth and wine for all not able to provide for themselves.

Pesach—Passover

PASSOVER PLATE

Courtesy, A. M. Burd, Germantown, Pa.

Designed and made by Reuben Leaf, New York City.

Both the slaughtering of the lamb and the eating of unleavened bread are customs originating before and independently of Israel. Arabic Bedouins to the present day, eat unleavened bread; while in the Near East, the slaughtering of lambs is an important feature of practically every religious and secular festivity. The date of Pesach, too, was long observed among Semitic tribes, as a season of festivity. But out of these dissociated customs, Israel molded a unified holiday; and into them Israel infused the great idea of national and personal liberty, employing the concept of the "Season of Spring" figuratively as a "Season of Freedom."

With the destruction of the Temple, the Spring-assemblages of the people at the Sanctuary were terminated; and like all other sacrifices, the sacrifice of the Paschal lamb was abolished. The sages of that time, seeking to create substitute means of impressing and strengthening Israel's hope for and his high ideal of freedom, composed the "Haggadah" a ritual built on the "Tale of Passover," to be observed in the home—the Jew's Sanctuary.

Preparatory to Pesach, comes house-cleaning, the ritual requirement of which is the ridding of the place of all leaven (Chametz) and the removing or cleaning of vessels used for Chametz. The ceremonial search for remnants of leaven (Bedikath chametz) is observed in Orthodox homes on the evening of the thirteenth of Nissan. Whatever is discovered is burned the following morning. After the noon hour of the fourteenth of Nissan, no pious Jew would eat either Chametz or Matzah. On the evening of the fourteenth, Pesach is initiated by a service in the synagogue, followed by the home Seder (literally: Order), a special meal with accompanying ritual commemorative of the Exodus from Egypt. In Orthodox circles, Seder is still observed on the first two evenings, the duplication arising originally from the instability of the ancient calendar.

For the Seder the dining room is illumined with the festival lamps or candles; the table is decked in the household's best linens and silver. At the left of each seat is placed a cushion—originally a luxury of oriental noblemen, here, symbolic of the Jew's freedom. The table is laden with symbols: Three cakes of Matzah are covered with a special cloth on which are embroidered or printed the benedictions over the Matzah. Pesach-wine of grapes or raisins, is served at each place in a tumbler of silver or glass (Hebrew—Kos) on which there are frequently engraved or painted the benediction over wine and various Jewish symbols. A large silver dish (Hebrew—Kaarah) holds a roasted lamb bone, commemorative of the Paschal lamb; a roasted egg, a substitute for the ancient holiday sacrifice (Korban chagigah); a

Pesach—Passover

THE CUP OF ELIJAH

Courtesy, A. M. Burd, Germantown, Pa.
Designed and made by Reuben Leaf,
New York City.

root of horseradish (Maror—bitter herb) symbol of the bitterness endured in Egypt; a sprig of parsley or watercress (Karpas); and Charoseth, a compound of ground apples, raisins and almonds mixed with cinnamon and wine, which by its appearance serves as a reminder of the clay from which our ancestors were forced to make bricks for Pharaoh. There is a special cup filled with wine, called Kos shel Eliyahu—the cup of the Prophet Elijah, who according to Jewish legend, visits every Seder, and who—at the end of days—will bring the tidings of the Messianic age. Each person present is provided with a Haggadah. Before beginning the ritual, the father used to put on his Kittl (white shroud).

The table service opens with the chanting of the Kiddush, followed by the drinking of the first cup (Kos) of wine. Karpas is served. Originally this was an appetizer. The master of the house breaks the middle of the three Matzoth, part of which (called Aphikomon—Greek for “dessert”) he hides to be discovered and eaten at the conclusion of the meal. As he lifts the Matzah he recites: “This is the bread of affliction,” etc. The youngest person present, usually a child, asks the “Four Questions”: (1) Why on this night, do we eat only unleavened bread? (2) Why do we eat Maror? (3) Why do we eat Charoseth? and (4) Why do we observe the ceremony of Seder? The leader answers these questions by relating the story of Israel in Egypt and of the Exodus conducted by Moses that he might bring Israel to the acceptance of the teachings of the One God. The Hallel (Psalms 113-114) is then sung, and the second cup of wine taken. Matzah-Maror, and Charoseth are distributed to all.

The service is here interrupted by the meal at which it is customary to serve hard boiled eggs dipped in salt water, and matzah-balls (Kneidlach, from German Knoedel). At the end of the meal, there is a scramble among the children to discover the hidden Matzah, necessary for the conclusion of the dinner. The fortunate one receives a prize. Dinner over, grace is chanted; and the third cup of wine drunk. The assemblage then chants the second part of Hallel (Psalms 115-118), takes the fourth cup of wine; and sings several old Hebrew folksongs, such as Addir hu (God of Might), Ki lo noe (Our souls we raise); and two especially devised to interest the children: Echad mi yode'a (Who knows one?) and Chad gadya (An only Kid.) All of these have been translated into both German and English. Their tunes were composed by Jewish singers during the last three centuries. According to old custom, before the conclusion of the Seder, the door is opened for the Prophet Elijah.

Pesach—Passover

FRONTISPIECE OF THE UNION
HAGGADAH

Published by
The Central Conference of American Rabbis.

Few books of the Jewish library have been more carefully and frequently edited and published than the ritual of the Seder, the Haggadah. During the Middle Ages, the art of illuminating and illustrating it was highly developed, producing art letters, ornamented title pages, marginal paintings and drawings of the Exodus story, symbolic figures portraying the religious and ethical interpretations, as derived from the text by the rabbis.

Many wonderful manuscripts have been preserved, some of which have recently been published. Of these, the Sarajevo, Darmstadt, and Frankfort Haggadahs rank first. Among modern Haggadahs, we note especially the "Revised Union Haggadah" published by the Central Conference of American Rabbis. In its art of ornamentation, in its presentation of the text, and last but not least in its addition of traditional Seder music, it is the highest achievement in Haggadah making, and the most suitable Haggadah for use by the modern Jew.

The Seder has survived in the Jewish home through every exigency of history. Practiced in secret by the Maranos in the days of the Inquisition, celebrated in the teeth of the relentless mobs with the threats of the old "blood accusation," the Seder persists as an emblem and promise of freedom. It ever was and still is the high spot of religious home ceremonies.

SEFIRAH LAG BAOMER

ON the second evening of Passover, "counting" (Sefirah) starts, and continues for forty-nine days until Shabuoth. This reckoning commemorates the ancient daily sacrifice, on the Temple altar, of a sheaf (Omer) of the first ripened ears, as commanded in Leviticus 23:10, 11. In the Orthodox Synagogue, after each evening service, announcement is made of the number of days that has passed. A special benediction is followed by a silent prayer. During the Sefirah-season certain signs of mourning are observed in Orthodox

Jew. Encyc.

TRADITIONAL GRAVE OF RABBI SIMEON BAR YOCHAI
AT TIME OF PILGRIMAGE

circles, such as refraining from having one's hair cut, permitting no weddings or other festivities. The mourning was ordered by the sages to remind us of the unsuccessful uprising of Bar Kochba (about 125 C. E.) against the crushing Roman yoke, and the terrible massacre of over half a million Jews that followed the quelling of that revolt. It is recorded that twenty-four thousand of Rabbi Akiba's disciples were killed during the fight.

Because the massacre stopped on the thirty-third day of Sefirah (Lag Baomer) this day was designated as a day on which God showed mercy to the remnant of Israel. Therefore on this day, children are given boiled eggs—a dish served to mourners; and celebrations are permitted.

During the Middle Ages, the cabalists in Palestine instituted a celebration on Lag Baomer, in memory of the legendary Rabbi Simeon Bar Yochai, because on this day, he was supposed to have revealed his cabalistic secrets to his disciples. The annual celebration is held in Meron, a village near Safed, Palestine, to which place thousands of people pilgrim.

SHABUOTH

(The Feast of Weeks)

SHABUOTH occurs six weeks after Pesach, on the evening of the fifth of Siwan. Originally only one day was celebrated; but later, on account of the unsettled calendar, a second was added. As with other holidays, so in the case of

Jew. Encyc.

TABLES OF THE LAW FROM AN ITALIAN SYNAGOGUE
—Dated 1671

this one, Reform Judaism reinstituted the original one day. Shabuoth is recorded in the Bible as Chag Habbikḳurim—

Ceremonies of Judaism

the feast of the offering of the first of the ripe crop. It was an agricultural festival observed in Palestine in ancient times. On account of its being the fiftieth day of Sefirah, this feast was called Pentecost, by the Greek speaking Jews.

Quite independently of this nature feast, Exodus 19 describes the great event of the giving of the Ten Commandments on Mt. Sinai, as occurring on the third day of Siwan. Thus Shabuoth came to be celebrated also as the festival of the giving of the Torah to Israel (Zeman Mattan Torahenu). After the destruction of the Temple, it was this latter idea which gave content to Shabuoth. Throughout the entire night preceding Shabuoth it became customary to read the Tikkun—excerpts from the first and last chapters of all Biblical books, as well as from the Mishnah. The synagogue used to be decorated with green branches and flowers, in commemoration of the original harvest-character of the festival. The service of the day includes the reading of the Ten Commandments. Also the book of Ruth is read because of its heroine's acceptance of Israel's religion. Many Hebrew hymns have been created for this service.

At home, dairy foods and honey are served, symbolizing Israel's joy in the Torah, which is compared to "milk and honey," that is nourishing and sweet.

The Synagogue is decorated with greenery as a symbol of the perennial freshness of the Torah.

The first leaders of the Reform Movement selected, for the "Confirmation" of Jewish boys and girls, this day of Shabuoth on which—according to tradition—Israel was first confirmed in its faith, by Moses. The custom has proved successful in its impressiveness upon the youth and in its revitalization of the festival.

TISH'A BE'AB THE THREE WEEKS

SOME of the Jewish festivals have had historical significance read into them. Others, however, such as Chanukah, were instituted in commemoration of actual events. Of the latter kind is also the season of the three weeks of mourning over the destruction of the two successive Temples in Jerusalem, over the devastation of the Jewish homeland in Palestine, and over the subsequent dispersion of the people to all the corners of the globe. This period starts with the fast of the seventeenth of Tammuz and concludes with the fast of the Ninth of Ab (Tish'a Be'ab), the day on which the Temples were burned. No festivity, no putting on of new clothes, no dedication of new buildings, is permissible during these three weeks. On the last nine days, pious people refrain from eat-

TISH'A
BE'AB

L. Horowitz

Ceremonies of Judaism

ing meat—symbol of the sacrifices offered in the Temple.

On the day of the concluding twenty-four hour fast, worshippers in the synagogue remove their shoes and sit upon the floor as a sign of mourning. The men use neither the Tallith nor the Tefillin in the morning service. The book of Lamentations is chanted in a traditional mournful tune, and many prayers and poems of lamentative character are recited. In the evening, the synagogue is but dimly illuminated. From the Ark, the curtains are removed, symbolizing that the Torah too, is in mourning.

For almost nineteen hundred years the whole Jewish people bewailed its loss of a national and spiritual centre, and expressed its deep sorrow over this calamity, by fasting and by praying and hoping for the rebuilding of the Temple in Jerusalem. Reform Judaism, while viewing the day as one commemorating historic tragedy, does not observe it with fasting.

E. Bendemann

JEREMIAH AT THE FALL OF JERUSALEM

THE JEWISH CALENDAR

SINCE all of our Jewish festivals are set according to the Jewish Calendar, it is important that we familiarize ourselves with its system.

The Jewish calendar is based on lunar reckonings. The circling of the moon around the earth constitutes a month. The day following the evening on which the new moon is first perceived is called Rosh Chodesh—New Moon. In ancient Israel this day was considered as important a festival as Sabbath. In the course of time this day lost much of its significance. It is at present observed in Orthodox circles, by special insertions in the services, such as Yaale Veyavo and Musaf, by the chanting of the Hallel and by the reading of a portion of the Pentateuch (Numbers 28:11-15), dealing with the sacrifices for this day. No mourning is permissible on Rosh Chodesh.

The day preceding each Rosh Chodesh is since the 17th century ordained a "Small Day of Atonement"—Yom Kippur Katon. On this day pious people fast and recite supplications.

Twelve lunar months constitute a year. The Jewish names of the months are: Tishrè, Cheshwan, Kislew, Tebeth, Shebat, Adar, Nissan, Iyyar, Siwan, Tammuz, Ab, Elul. The circling of the moon around the earth takes 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes and 3 seconds. In order to use round figures the five months Tishrè, Shebat, Nissan, Siwan, Ab were arranged with 30 and the five months Tebeth, Adar, Iyyar, Tammuz and Elul with 29 days. If the month has 29 days, one day Rosh Chodesh is observed, but if the month has 30 days two days Rosh Chodesh are celebrated, the last day of the outgoing and the first of the new month. The months Cheswan and Kislev have sometimes 29 and sometimes 30 days. The number is determined by the adjustment of the calendar, resulting from the fixing of the Day of Atonement (which, according to the Law, must never occur on a Friday or a Sunday) and of Hoshana Rabba (which must never fall on Saturday).

Ceremonies of Judaism

The twelve months total 354 days, 8 hours, 48 minutes and 36 seconds, against 365 days, 6 hours and 48 seconds of the solar year (according to the Jewish sages). Thus the lunar year is shorter than the solar year by about 10 days, 21 hours and 12 seconds. If we should reckon according to the lunar year only, it would come about that Passover and Succoth would fall sometimes in winter and sometimes in summer. We see this peculiar shifting of the festivals among the Mohammedans who too have the lunar calendar. The Bible distinctly orders that Passover be celebrated in the spring and Succoth be observed after the harvest in the fall season. Hence an adjustment was devised, between the lunar and solar years by the adding every two or three years, of the leap month Adar Sheni—the second Adar. These extra 29 days added to the regular 354 make the leap year 383 days; and provide for the accumulated shortage of approximately 11 days a year. From the explanations thus far given it is obvious, that the Jewish months can never run parallel with the months of the solar year. Therefore the Jewish Holidays fall, each year, on different dates of the civil calendar.

In olden times in Palestine the beginning of the month was determined in a primitive way. On the day when the new moon was expected people were sent, at sunset, to the shore of the Mediterranean, where the horizon is unobstructed, to watch for the appearance of the new moon. As soon as two people reported having seen it, the Jewish supreme court announced the beginning of the month. This news was then immediately relayed by the fire-signals hoisted by special watchmen on the peaks of the mountains, so that during the night the word spread all over the country. Later however, the hostile Samaritans, in order to deceive the people, would send out false fire-signals. Therefore the Jews abandoned this method, and instead, sent trustworthy messengers to carry tidings of the new moon. This means of course, was slow. At times, the messengers could not reach all the communities, especially those beyond the limits of Palestine. These would be left in doubt as to the exact day of the new moon and holiday celebrations were correspondingly delayed. Therefore the High Court in Jerusalem issued the order that the Jews outside of Palestine should celebrate each of the principal festivals two days. This usage persisted even after the permanent calendar was established and sanctioned by Hillel II, Jewish Prince in Palestine in 360 C. E., and the custom survives to this day. Reform Judaism, however, abolished it.

The Jewish Calendar

In Palestine, all holidays—with the exception of Rosh-Hashanah—have always been celebrated but one day. Originally this holiday too lasted only one day. But it once happened that through error, the new moon was announced one day ahead of time. The spiritual leaders, in their anxiety to have the new year begin as exactly as possible, ordered, shortly before the destruction of the Second Temple, that thereafter Rosh Hashanah be celebrated two days: the first and the second day of Tishrè. In this case too, Reform Judaism returned to the original one day.

II

DAILY CEREMONIES IN HOME AND SYNAGOGUE

*"I set the Lord before me at all times."
This statement of the Psalmist (16:8)
voices the thought underlying the various religious customs in the daily life of the Jew.*

TZITZITH

TZITZITH (fringe) means white threads with which a cord of sky-blue is entwined, originally fastened to the four corners of the robe, which men in the Orient customarily wore. This robe, called Tallith, was a square piece of woolen cloth (somewhat similar to the abaya of the Arabs) in which the people used to wrap themselves. According to Numbers 15:38-40, the custom of attaching the fringe to each corner, was commanded "that you may look upon it and remember all the commandments of the Lord and do them; and that ye go not about after your own heart and your own eyes after which ye use to go astray." The Tzi-

S. Bender

WINDING THE TZITZITH ON THE TALLITH

TALLITH (Showing Tzitzith in Corners)

tzith served as the Jew's uniform, whereby he was recognized and distinguished from the gentile. The blue cord entwined in the fringe was its principal distinction. The use of blue is thus explained in the Talmud: "Because this color resembles the sea; the sea resembles the sky; and the sky resembles the 'chair of Glory'." The method of dying the threads sky-blue, was a secret of the people in Acre, Palestine. After the dispersion, the art was forgotten by the Jews in the Diaspora, and the use of the blue thread was discontinued.

Four white threads are drawn through each of the four corners of the Tallith or Tallith Katan, and a double knot is made with one of the threads which is longer than the others and is called "Shamash." The other threads are wound according to the following order: 7 windings and a double knot, 8 windings and a double knot, 11 windings and a double knot and 13 windings and a double knot. If 2 of the 8 threads are torn off, the Tzitzith is not considered valid. The 39 windings represent the numerical value of יהוה אחד.

Tzitzith

In the course of time, the Jews, adopting the costumes of the lands of their residence, could no longer attach Tzitzith to their main garment. The Tallith was retained but its use restricted to the Synagogue during the morning service. Its fringes are kissed, and a benediction is pronounced, as it is wrapped about the worshipper. In order to fulfill the Biblical injunction to wear "fringes" at all times, a substitute was devised in the Tallith Katan (small Tallith), otherwise called Arba-Kanfoth (four corners). This is a rectangular piece of linen, silk, or woolen cloth, with Tzitzith on its four corners, and an opening in the center large enough to admit the head. Resting on the shoulders, it hangs over the chest and back; and is worn under the garments. The use of the large Tallith was obligatory for only the adult males—according to the custom of some countries, beginning with the youth's marriage; according to that of other lands, dating from his Bar Mitzvah ceremony (at the age of thirteen). The duty of wearing the small Tallith, on the other hand, rests upon every male, from early boyhood. No pious Jew would walk even "four steps" without it. Reform Judaism in America employs neither the Arba Kanfoth nor the Tallith.

ARBA KANFOTH

Jew. Encyc.

TEFILLIN

(Phylacteries or Frontlets)

AS soon as a Jew rises in the morning, his first duty is to prepare himself for the morning service—Teffilath Shacharith. After washing his hands and face, he recites: "I thank thee, O King, living and eternal God, that thou hast in mercy returned to me my soul. Great is Thy faithfulness."

The use of the Tefillin is based on an interpretation of the statements in Exodus 13:9 and Deut. 6:8. In ancient times, protecting amulets were worn on head and hands. With the development of loftier ideas in Judaism, this custom was re-interpreted to remind the wearer of his duties to God. "As long as the Tefillin are on the head and the arm of a man," say the sages, "he is modest and God-fearing, will not be attracted by hilarity or idle talk, and will have no evil thoughts; but will devote his mind wholly to truth and righteousness."

The name Tefillin (singular Tefilla) is derived from Tefilla (prayer). The objects consist of two square black leather boxes (Batim), one worn on the left arm (called Shel Yad), and the other (Shel Rosh) worn on the forehead where the hairgrowth starts. The boxes are made of the skins of Levitically "clean" animals. They are backed with square pieces of thick leather, and sealed by means of twelve stitches made with threads prepared from the veins of "clean" animals. At their corners are strap-loops through which are passed leather straps cut from the skin of "clean"

Tefillin—Phylacteries or Frontlets

animals and blackened on the top. The strap that runs through the loops of the head-phylactery is fastened in a circle large enough to fit onto the head, by means of a knot in the shape of the Hebrew letter ק. The one that passes through the loops of the hand phylactery, forms a noose near the box, that is fastened by a knot in the shape of the letter נ. The head-box has on the outside, the letter ש to the

PRAYING JEW
WITH TALLITH AND TEFILLIN

M. P. Klodt

right while to the left the same letter has four strokes. These three letters are those of the Hebrew word שרי—Shadday (Almighty). The head-box contains four compartments which hold as many bits of parchment, each inscribed with one of the four Biblical passages: Exodus 13:1-10, Exodus 13:11-16; Deuteronomy 6:4-9; and Deuteronomy 11:13-21. The hand-box has only one compartment to hold one parchment sheet on which all the four passages are written.

Ceremonies of Judaism

Every man from the age of thirteen, is obliged to use the Tefillin for each week-day morning service, whether he worships in the Synagogue or at home. The Jew does not employ them on Sabbaths and holidays, because these days—being in themselves religious symbols—are accounted sufficient reminders of his religious duties.

S. Bender

TEACHING A BOY TO PUT ON TEFILLIN

As the Tefillin are drawn from their containers they are kissed. The hand-phylactery is put on first. Its box is set on the inside of the left arm (the arm nearer to the heart), just above the elbow. Its strap is wound seven times around the arm, and three additional times around the hand in the form of the letter ψ . Then the strap circle of the head-phylactery is set onto the head, bringing the box over the center of the forehead, and the strap-knot low on the head at the center-back, the ends of the straps being thrown front over the shoulders. While adjusting the Tefillin, the man recites a benediction, and when the arrangement is completed, he quotes Hosea 2:21-22.

Tefillin—Phylacteries or Frontlets

Many great rabbis used to wear Tefillin all the day long. Only people in clean places, able to devote themselves entirely to meditations and the study of the holy teachings are permitted to wear Tefillin the whole day.

Women, exempted by law from the duty of Tefillin and Tallith used to manifest their religious devotion by embroidering bags for the Tefillin and the Tallith of their husbands, sons or brothers.

MEZUZAH

THE name Mezuzah is the Hebrew word for door-post, to which place this ceremonial object is fastened. The Mezuzah is a small wooden, glass, or metal case or tube, containing a rolled rectangular piece of parchment inscribed with the passages: Deuteronomy 6:4-9 and 11:13-21. On the outer side of the parchment, near the top of the roll, is written the word Shadday; and an opening is left in the case opposite the word. The Mezuzah is affixed in a slanting position, to the upper part of the door-post at one's right as he enters the dwelling, the upper end of the box pointing inward and the lower one outward. Pious Jews kiss their fingers after they touch the Mezuzah, reciting: "May God keep my going out and my coming in, from now on and evermore." The fastening of it to the door-post is accompanied by a benediction. Among modern Jews, the Mezuzah has fallen into disuse.

THE MEZUZAH

Mezuzah

Just as Tzitzith and Tefillin originated as charms to protect the body from evil spirits, so also to the Mezuzah was ascribed the power of warding off from the house all harm from without. And just as into the former two objects a higher religious conception was later read, so also new meaning was given the Mezuzah. The Biblical command reads: "And Thou shalt write them (the laws of God) upon the door-posts of thy house, and upon thy gates." (Deuteronomy 6:9). Maimonides thus explains the value of the Mezuzah. "By the commandment of the Mezuzah, man is reminded, when coming or going, of the unity of God, and is aroused to the love of Him. He is awakened from his slumber and has vain worldly thoughts to the realization that nothing endures in eternity as the knowledge of the Rock of the World. This contemplation brings him back to himself and leads him on the right path."

The Talmud says: "Whoever has Tefillin on his head and arm, Tzitzith on his garments, and a Mezuzah on his door, gives assurance that he will not commit sins."

TABLE CEREMONIES

BEFORE all meals at which bread is served (it being considered the main part of a meal) the Jew is obliged to wash his hands and while doing so, to pronounce a benediction, because he is to be purified for the table as a priest for the altar on which sacrifices are made. Therefore a certain sanctity attached to the meal. A benediction must be recited over bread, which is frequently dipped in salt as a remembrance of the way the sacrifices used to be salted. "If three have eaten at a table and have spoken there no words of Torah, it is as if they had eaten of sacrifices to dead idols" (Ethics of the Fathers 3:4). After the meal, on week-days, Psalm 137 and grace are chanted.

THE DIETARY LAWS

ALREADY in ancient Israel there existed customs pertaining to food. Only vegetables were permitted without restrictions, whereas for certain fruit, such as grapes, laws defined when and how their use was permitted. Similarly grain was subjected to rules such as sacrificing on the altar the first ripe sheaves and giving to the priests a certain quantity before the rest might be used. Laws prohibited even the planting together of grain and fruit. However, most restrictions were laid upon the use of meat. In the first place only a limited number of kinds of animals, fowl, and fish, was permitted. In Leviticus XI rules are given according to which the permitted, the clean (Kosher) ones, should be recognized, and the names are listed of the unclean kinds which should not be tasted, the milk and eggs of which should not be eaten, and the dead bodies of which should not be touched. But even the use of the permitted kinds was manifoldly restricted.

In ancient Israel, if one wanted to eat meat, he had to bring the animal or the bird, usually a pigeon, as a sacrifice to the altar. The priest slaughtered it, dashed the blood against the altar, and burned parts of the fat upon the altar. Certain parts of the sacrificed animal belonged to the priest. At a later time it became permissible to slaughter animals without sacrificing (Deut. 12:21); but the eating of the blood was emphatically prohibited, "for the blood is the life" (Deut. 12:23). This regulation was enforced by the sages to such an extent that even a drop of blood found in the yolk, makes the egg forbidden food, because it is accounted evidence that the process of hatching has already begun. The customs of ritual slaughtering, of refraining from the eating of blood, of certain fat, and of the unclean kinds of living creatures, have been retained.

The method of prescribed slaughtering (in Hebrew Shechita) is the cutting through of the wind pipe and the gullet in mammals, or either of these in birds, with a specially prepared knife (in Hebrew Chalaf). This knife must be sharp and smooth, without notches, so that the cut shall not be interrupted, and shall not cause unnecessary pain to the animal. The knife must be without a point, must be of pure steel, and its length must be at least twice the width of the neck of the animal. There are three sizes: a small one for fowl, a larger one for small cattle, and the largest size for big animals. For such killing, an expert slaughterer (Shochet) is required, who, having studied the code of laws pertaining to ritual slaughtering, has been examined, and provided with a certificate (Kabbalah) by a rabbi, and has practiced under the guidance of an experienced Shochet. Before slaughtering, the Shochet has to examine the smoothness of the edge of the knife with the nail of his forefinger, then he must examine the fowl or animal, to make sure that there is not a defective limb, or some other deficiency which, according to the Law, would make it unfit to eat. Then he has to pronounce a certain Hebrew benediction. It is an old custom that the blood of a fowl be covered with ashes. After the slaughtering is performed, the knife has to be examined to ascertain whether a notch was made in it during the process of cutting. In such case the object slaughtered is declared unfit (Trefah). This is also the case if at least the greater part of the two before-mentioned organs in mammals or of one in fowl, are not cut through. In addition, in mammals, the lungs have to be examined by the Shochet to determine whether they are affected with tuberculosis or with some other disease recorded in the code. In case of slight touches of tuberculosis in the lungs, the soundness of the liver determines the ritual cleanness (Kashruth) of the animal. Every stomach must be examined. In prescribing these tests, the sages declared that "a diseased animal cannot live," that is that the disease must finally overcome the animal's vitality, and that for the sake of the health of the person, meat of such an animal must not be eaten.

The Dietary Laws

SLAUGHTERING KNIVES

Jew. Encyc.

The prohibition of blood was extended even to the blood that comes forth from the meat. Therefore, the Jew was commanded to keep meat in water for half an hour and then in salt for an hour, so that the blood be extracted. There was further required the extraction of certain veins of blood and vessels of fat running through the body of the animal. (This procedure is called treibern in Yiddish, Nikkur in Hebrew.) Fish and locusts—the latter eaten in the Orient—are not subjected to ritual slaughtering.

Interdiction was pronounced on the eating of milk, butter, cheese, or any other dairy dish, with meat or with any food prepared with meat. In their stern strict manner the rabbis ordered special sets of dishes for meat and for dairy food. The Bible prohibition reads only: "Thou shalt not seethe a kid in its mother's milk" (Ex. 23:19; 34:26; Deut. 14:21). Judging from the severity that the law acquired and the strictness of its observance during so many centuries, we may presume that this custom of separating meat from milk dates back originally to a very early time. Honey was adjudged a permitted food since it is merely the juice of the flower gathered by the bee and then secreted; and contains no portion of the bee which, as an insect, is prohibited.

The idea underlying all these restrictions is given in Leviticus 11:44: "Sanctify yourselves therefore, and be ye holy; for I am holy; neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of swarming thing that moveth upon the earth." And Deut. 14:3 admonishes: "Thou shalt not eat any abominable thing." Some sages regard the dietary laws as restrictions that grew out of old taboos. Some think that ritual slaughtering was ordered to prevent cruelty, because in olden times Israel's neighbors used to cut off limbs of living animals and eat them (Deut. 12:23). Again others maintain the idea that all dietary laws, those pertaining to slaughtering as well as the rules about clean and unclean animals, grew out of hygienic precautions. They are convinced that people who eat unclean animals incur diseases and further bring a bad effect upon their spirit. Many modern scientists too are convinced that the method of ritual slaughtering is the best and least painful of all methods. Indeed the dietary laws exerted a great influence upon the Jewish people through the dark centuries—living as they did, amidst people of a much lower cultural level, people with no hygienic principles and no boards of health. These laws saved the Jews from many diseases transmitted through unhealthy food of infected animals. They also exerted a strong psychological influence, in that the Jew believed that the conscientious observance of the dietary laws helped to keep him clean in body and in spirit.

The Dietary Laws

THE COVERING OF THE HEAD

THE covering of the head was always customary in Israel at religious functions. The priests had to wear mitres or headdress while officiating (Exodus 28:36-38). At the beginning of the Common Era, the covering of the head began to be practiced not only for religious acts but at all times. Many sages did not walk "four steps" with uncovered head. This habit was considered symbolic of the fear of God. Especially during meals, to which a religious meaning was attached, nobody would uncover his head.

This custom is not a Jewish one exclusively. The Moham-medans too observe it religiously. It was accorded greater importance by Jews living among Christians who practiced the uncovering of the head as a sign of reverence. To make the observance easier, Orthodox Jews use a little cap, Yarmulke (a Slavic-Tartarian word) or (in German) Kappel.

The emancipation of the Jews in the nineteenth century and their adoption of European customs brought about the neglect of the habit of covering their heads in daily life. Some of the Reform leaders advocated the uncovering of the head even at religious functions; and in 1845 the Reform Congregation in Berlin started worshipping bareheaded. The innovation, however, found no following in Europe. But in America it found adherents in the Reform group and was adopted in almost all Reform congregations. It became a stumbling block for many conservative minded Jews preventing them from joining the Reform movement. Thus we see that customs often loom larger than basic principles in religion. "Do not walk in the ways of the gentiles"—this precept was not so strictly observed in regard to many commandments as in the case of the custom of the covering of the head. Even Jews, who, in their daily life are negligent of the observance of many Biblical and Rabbinical precepts and do not practice the covering of the head, consider this custom most important in religious functions in the Synagogue. To worship bareheaded, they regard as a typical Christian form, for which Paul pleaded in saying: "Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered dishonoureth his head" (1 Corinthians 11:4). The Reform attitude is that, inasmuch as the uncovering of the head became the manner of expressing reverence among all European and American people in their religious and secular life the Jew should not be singled out by different practice.

The Covering of the Head

THE SHEITEL

Married women used to cover their hair, as a sign of chastity. In the Orient a special hair-kerchief (yazme) is worn, while in Europe the Sheitel (German for wig) or Perruk (from French perruque) is customary. In ultra-orthodox circles women are obliged to cut short or even to shave off their hair on the eve of their wedding. Mohammedan women are urged to cover their faces completely at the approach of strange men. Among Jews as well as among Mohammedans this custom is gradually falling into disuse, with the progress of woman's emancipation.

THE MIZRACH

THE Mizrach (literally: the Rising of the Sun; or the East) is a decorated motto or picture hung on the eastern wall in many Jewish homes and in front of the reading desk in the Synagogue. This sign gives the direction toward which Jews living west of Palestine turn while at prayer. The custom of turning in prayer, toward Jerusalem dates back to the time after the destruction of the first Temple. Jews who live east of Palestine turn toward the west, those who live south of it turn toward the north, and those who find themselves north of it turn toward the south. The Jews in Europe and America turn toward the east. In accordance with this custom, synagogues are so constructed that the ark may be placed on the eastern wall. Reform Judaism, emphasizing the conviction that God is everywhere, has built its synagogues facing no specific direction.

Jew. Encyc.

MIZRACH

The Mizrach

In the making of the Mizrach, considerable art has been expended. Usually Psalm 113:3 is inscribed in Hebrew. Some scenes of the Bible are drawn or the "Wailing Wall" in Jerusalem is sketched. An Orthodox Jew, who happens to be in a strange house, when the time of prayer comes, looks for the Mizrach, or else asks where the east is.

Thus the daily ceremonies effectively remind the Jew of his Judaism.

III

CEREMONIAL OBJECTS IN THE SYNAGOGUE

Several objects in the Synagogue are institutions as old as is Judaism.

CEREMONIAL OBJECTS IN THE SYNAGOGUE

MANY objects in the Synagogue have been transmitted from the Temple in Jerusalem, and to the Temple from still older sanctuaries of Israel.

Kiyor. Near the entrance of the vestibule of the Orthodox Synagogue is the Kiyor (Laver), a water basin usually of engraved or wrought copper or brass. In the early Tabernacle and in the Jerusalem Temple the laver was designed for the ablution of the priests "when they come near to the altar to minister" (Ex. 30:20). Like many others, this priestly custom later became incumbent upon the whole of the priest-people; and every Jew was enjoined to wash his hands before praying. On Festivals, before the Cohanim (members of the priestly tribe) walk forward to bless the congregation, they wash their hands from this—or in some synagogues, a special laver, while the water is poured for them by Levites (members of the tribe of Levi). Hygienic and aesthetic considerations have ruled the Kiyor out of the modern Synagogue.

Tzedakah Box. Near the inner Synagogue door, are frequently fastened one or more boxes for various charities. According to the old Jewish attitude, prayer is acceptable only when combined with true repentance and with charity. And genuine charity is that given in secret. Even a person supported by charity is obliged to give, says the Talmud.

Seating. The Orthodox Synagogue is partitioned into the chief division for men and a smaller secondary section for women. This latter is generally raised to a balcony along the western wall (that is the rear of the Synagogue auditorium). Sometimes it extends also along the northern and southern walls. This separation of the sexes during the service, is of ancient origin—instituted in Israel to preclude the ugly religious practices of the neighboring peoples, and to preserve purity of worship. The plans of the Temple in Jerusalem specify a woman's court (Ezrath Nashim). The arrangement continued unchallenged until the modern emancipation of woman.

Inasmuch as Reform flourishes only in those sections of the world where the modern standards of culture have placed men and women side by side in education, business, and social life, the Reform Synagogue has abolished the woman's gallery, and seated men and women together in worship. In some places, the family pew is customary.

Concerning the seating plan of the main Synagogue auditorium, there are two customs. In central and eastern Europe, in the Ashkenazic synagogues, the seats are arranged in rows facing the east, that is the front of the synagogue. The Reform Synagogue follows this plan (See Mizrach). In western Europe and in the near East, in Sephardic and Oriental synagogues, the seats are arranged in concentric rectangles, so as to face the Almemor or Bema (see Reading Desks below) which stands in the center. In many synagogues in central and western Europe special seats are built either in front of the Almemor or Bema or against the northern wall, for the president, vice-president and secretary of the congregation. This custom is not known in Eastern Europe. From Talmudic times, seats along the Mizrach (eastern) wall have been a sign of special honor. In the Reform Synagogue special chairs for the president and vice-president are, like those for the rabbi and cantor, set on the platform.

Ceremonial Objects in the Synagogue

Reading Desks. The Almemor (Arabic: Al-mimbar, orator pulpit) or Bema (Greek for speaker's tribune) is an elevated platform with a reading desk, originally placed in center of the Synagogue. It was instituted in emulation of Ezra's raised pulpit, and for the same purpose, that is the reading of the Book of the Law (Nehemiah 8:4-8). Such a platform and desk were built in the court of the Second Temple; and thence transplanted into the Synagogue. In the course of time there developed two manners of using it. The Ashkenazim employ the Bema, as originally intended, for reading the Torah and for making announcements, whereas the Sephardim use it also as the desk from which the precentor recites the prayers. Some Ashkenazic synagogues in English countries adopted this Sephardic custom. Certain Portuguese synagogues have drawn the Almemor back to the western wall.

The Amud or Prayer-desk since Talmudic days, has been set before the Ark, or at times to the right of it. The reader or chazzan stands at the Amud with his back to the congregation, facing the Ark, to pronounce the prayers. The Talmud emphasizes that the floor of the Prayer-desk should be lower than that of the Synagogue, that the reader may speak as did the Psalmist: "Out of the depths have I called Thee, O Lord" (130:1). In front of the desk there is usually a Mizrach (see this) with some Biblical phrases inscribed, such as "Know before whom thou standest," or "I behold my Lord before me always." The Amud, as already insinuated, is used in the Ashkenazic synagogues only.

In the modernized Orthodox synagogues, the Bema has

POLISH SYNAGOGUE AT VIENNA

Jew. Encyc.

Ceremonial Objects in the Synagogue

been drawn up to the Amud and either the two desks become one, or the Amud stands close to the Ark and the Bema a little further from it.

The Reform Synagogue has but one desk, set on a platform at the front. From it the prayers and Torah are read and the sermon delivered. The reader at all times faces the congregation.

The Aron-haḳodesh (the Ark of the Holiness) is placed at the eastern wall either as a niche built into the wall or as a chest fastened onto or protruding from it. It has always been customary for the Synagogue to be so constructed that the worshippers, when turning toward the Ark, face in the direction of Jerusalem. For the Jews of Europe and America, this has meant that the front wall of the synagogue auditorium be on the east. The ark is set on an elevated platform against the eastern wall, and is approached by steps. It is a reminder of the Biblical Ark of the Covenant in which the Tables of the Law were placed. In the Aron haḳodesh, the Torah (Five Books of Moses) is kept. As a rule the Ark contains more than one scroll. Large and old synagogues own thirty to fifty scrolls, donated by members of the congregation. The presentation of a scroll to the synagogue has ever been considered a great merit. The Ark is lined with silk or velvet. In it are specially formed stands to support the scrolls. The designing and ornamenting of the Ark have afforded expression for some exquisite art. Despite the prohibition of figures, pictures or paintings in the Synagogue, exception has always been made in the case of the two carved or painted figures of two lions above the Ark holding the Ten Commandments. In some synagogues, deers are added, symbolizing the saying of the sages: "Be fleet as a hart and strong as a lion to do the will of thy Father who is in heaven." (Aboth V:23). Before the open face of the Ark, is suspended a silk or velvet curtain called Parocheth, overhung by a short drape. This is a reminder of the Tabernacle and the Temple. The Parocheth was the Temple curtain separating the holy space from the Holy of Holies (Ex. 26:31-34, Babli Kethuboth 106a). In many Portuguese synagogues there is no Parocheth. On the High Holidays special hangings of white silk are used, symbolizing forgiveness. The covers on the prayer desk and reading desk are likewise white. The curtains and covers are usually donations of women, who frequently embroider them with such designs as the Ten Commandments, the letters כתוב (the Crown of the Torah) with two lions holding a crown, and with their own names in Hebrew characters. The Ark is considered the holiest part of the Synagogue, never to be profaned, even if no longer in use. Nevertheless in emergency cases such as the caring for orphans or the redeeming of captives, it is permissible to sell even the Ark.

The Ner Tamid (Perpetual Light) is suspended above and in front of the Ark. It is one of the ancient ceremonials traceable to Biblical sources. In Exodus 27:20-21 and again in Leviticus 24:2 we read: "Command the children of Israel, that they bring unto thee pure olive oil beaten for the light, to cause a lamp to burn continually . . . before the Lord." In the Temple in Jerusalem this light burned continually. Transferred into the Synagogue, it was interpreted as a symbol of the perpetual light contained in the Torah, for in the Torah's doctrine lies the Jew's way of life: in its study, his noblest delight. Thus the Ner Tamid is the true beacon of Israel's path. In the Synagogue, vacant or occupied, day or night, through the centuries, it creates an atmosphere of eternity, of faith, of hope, of the continuity of our people and the timelessness of God. Delightful artistic forms have been given it. From wrought metal chains is usually suspended the bowl which originally was the receptacle for the oil to feed the flame. Oil has given way to gas and then to electricity; but the grace of the oil bowl still supports the light.

Ceremonial Objects in the Synagogue

Jew. Encyc.

INTERIOR OF SEPHARDIC SYNAGOGUE AT AMSTERDAM

Menorah. At the right of the Ark, is placed the Menorah, the eight branched Chanukah lamp. In some synagogues the Ark is ornamented with the seven branched Menorah in the ancient form which it had in the sanctuary in Jerusalem, described in Exodus 25:31-40, and pictured on the Arch of Titus in Rome.

Sefer Torah (The Book of Teaching). The scroll kept in the Ark, contains the Five Books of Moses. For its ceremonial use in the Synagogue, it is never printed, never inscribed on paper, nor bound. Its form and its manner of preparation are minutely prescribed in Jewish law and consecrated by uninterrupted practice from Bible times to our own day.

Parchment sheets—skins of ritually clean animals only—

THE TORAH
(H. U. C. Library)

cut to regulated sizes and set together in a specified way, form the very long sheet on one side of which is inscribed the whole of the Torah. The two ends of this sheet of parchment are attached to two rollers on either end of which are flat discs of wood topped by long handles. On these rollers (each called an Etz chayim, tree of life), the parchment is turned until the whole sheet is wound and the two rolls meet. The discs at the ends keep the rolls straight and protected. On them and the handles, Biblical phrases and the name of the donor are frequently carved or inlaid.

Ceremonial Objects in the Synagogue

In Ashkenazic custom the rolled Torah is held together by a Mappa, a silk or velvet band, bound about it and tied or clasped. A fitted embroidered velvet mantle of purple, blue, or red (white for High Holidays) is drawn over the top handles; and resting on the top discs, covers the parchment scroll. Hung from the handles over the front of the mantle, is the Tzitz or breastplate. It is of beaten silver or gold, formed with a small pocket space to contain inserts inscribed with the word Sabbath or the names of other sacred days.

Suspended by a silver chain, hangs the Yod, the pointer, the end of which is formed like a small hand with an extended index finger. This is employed by the person reading the Torah. The dressed Torah is topped by either one broad Kether (crown) sitting over the two long handles, or a smaller one for each handle. These crowns are usually elaborately formed of silver, and often adorned with tiny silver bells.

Sephardic and Oriental Jews wrap the entire length of the scroll with silk; and, instead of enclosing it in a mantle, lay it into a Tek, a wooden box covered with silk or velvet.

The Torah is written in the square Hebrew letters with-

TORAH WITH ORNAMENTS

Josef Israels

THE TORAH-SCRIBE

out vocalization. For certain of these, there are prescribed embellishments called crowns, (Ketharim), crownlets or horns (Taggin). Spaces between letters, words, and lines; paragraphs and book divisions; spacing of texts, and other multiple details are all definitely regulated. The task of writing a scroll is an especially consecrated one; and the Jewish sages emphasize that the Sofer (scribe) must not only know and follow the regulations for the writing of each letter, but must be clean of hand and thought and filled with devotion to God.

MODERN AMERICAN REFORM SYNAGOGUE

Ceremonial Objects in the Synagogue

Organ and Choir Loft. Since 1810 the Reform Synagogue has used the pipe organ in all religious services. This is built into either the rear of the synagogue auditorium in the balcony, or in the front above the Ark. According to its placement, the choir loft is set.

IV

PRAYER AND SONG

Israel's prayers have ever been rendered in music. His liturgy evolved a distinctive musical calendar—a colorful expression of the significant dates in the Jewish year.

PRAYER AND SONG

THE prayer-books of the Jews are many and varied. Different groups long widely divided geographically, and different parties with divergent doctrines have, in the course of time evolved rituals of their own. But beneath all the variations, the framework of the Jewish service remains the same—essentially patterned after the schedule of worship in the Temple in Jerusalem. On this one framework is built every service of the Jewish calendar.

The times of daily worship correspond to the times of the ancient Temple services: Morning service—Shacharith; Afternoon service—Mincha; an Additional service for Sabbaths and festivals—Musaf. Later there was instituted the Evening service—Maariv.

The framework of the service is built upon seven chief divisions:

FIRST are the Introductory Blessings.

SECOND are the Verses of Praise—Pesuke dezimrah—varied and expanded for special days.

THIRD is the fundamentally important Shema with its preceding and succeeding paragraphs.

THE FOURTH SECTION, adjusted and reshaped for different services, but always present, is the Prayer—Tefillah. It is called also Amida, which name refers to the practice of reciting it standing. (Most Reform congregations do not observe this custom.) This fourth section is further known as the Shemone esre (Eighteen Benedictions). It retains this name even when, as in certain services, it contains but seven of its benedictions. Within this part of the service comes the Sanctification—Kedusha.

Ceremonies of Judaism

THE FIFTH DIVISION is Supplication—Tachanun.

SIXTH is the Reading of the Torah which occurs in certain morning and afternoon services.

THE SEVENTH DIVISION is the conclusion, containing the Adoration—Olelu, and the Kaddish, an exalted expression of the holiness of God.

Moreover, the pivotal prayers are permanent throughout the year's ritual. For example, the vital paragraphs of the Shema are repeated without change; certain of the benedictions of the Tefillah never fall out and never vary their text; and so on in each division of the service.

Within the established framework and around the permanent texts, special prayers are inserted, some omitted, and changes made in others, marking the differences between the services of the week-days, Sabbaths, festivals, fasts, and Holy Days.

Modern parties in Israel have added to the Hebrew prayer-book, translations of many of its prayers, and have eliminated much Medieval poetry which protracted the service. Reform Judaism has omitted the Additional service—Musaf—for Sabbaths and festal days. It has abbreviated to avoid repetitions and has rephrased many traditional prayers to escape outgrown attitudes and beliefs and to bring the ritual into closer conformity with the thinking of the modern enlightened Jew. But the chief prayers and the general outline of the service remain the same.

Alongside this strict adherence to the structure and essential texts, run two practices which prevent monotony and provide the distinctive coloring of the services of the different occasions. One is the varying of the texts of certain prayers and the insertion of special ones for each occasion of the religious calendar. The second one is singing.

Prayer and Song

Jewish prayer has ever been rendered in music. Since the institution of the Synagogue arose, the chazzan has chanted and sung, and the united voice of the congregation has responded. Given modes and tunes have been distinctive of certain seasons, of special days and events. This association of tune and service has created the coloring of the Jewish musical calendar. The same words of the same prayer in its same place in the service, when rendered in one musical mode instead of another, at once expresses the occasion, and determines the spirit and color of the service. The temporary musical chaos in the present day Synagogue, especially in the Western World, will surely not dam this stream of meaningful song!

The flavor of the Sabbath chant (Shabbas nigun) creates for the worshipper the atmosphere of the Sabbath (see pages 5-11). In the simplest purest form of this Sabbath mode, we present a selection of the Friday Evening Service: Veshe-meru, page 100.

Unique in the music of the world is that of the Jews for the High Holy Days (see pages 12-21). Many of the prayers that we have pronounced all year, we repeat on these days. But so changed is the vehicle of their expression, so different the atmosphere created, that the very words carry new meaning and fresh spirit. The simpler familiar phrases of the daily service, which take on warmth and added beauty for the Sabbath, now sound forth with majesty and exaltation. The entire ritual of the High Holy Days is voiced in song of sustained grandeur. Therefore, while numerous chants and songs for these days are creations of compelling devotional beauty, the full glory of the music can be experienced only in the completeness of the service that it interprets. Especially distinctive of Rosh Hashanah is the music of the Shofar service (see "Jewish Song Book," pages 204-207). Expressive of the spirit of the New Year is the hymn On Mighty Wings (see "Jewish Song Book," page 185). We select from the song of the service just one prayer text, for presentation here. Even a few bars of the traditional Ovos must carry the Jew, in thought, into the crowded Synagogue, and wrap him in the hushed awe of that sacred service. (Ovos, page 102.)

Ceremonies of Judaism

Beloved among the great melodies of Yom Kippur, and most famous in the world at large, is Kol nidre. Because of the general familiarity with this extraordinary number, we give only reference to the place where it may be found: "Jewish Song Book" English text, p. 215; with a Hebrew text, p. 252. A noble reworking in English of the Hebrew Yaale gives us the hymn so appropriate to the spirit of the day; "Jewish Song Book," p. 223. For its flexible beauty and its tone of awe, nothing surpasses the music to which is pronounced the description of the priests in the Temple in Jerusalem on the solemn Day of Atonement: Veha'kohanim, page 106. At once awesome and joyous, the music of Neilah (the concluding service of Yom Kippur) accords with the sublimity of the prayers that it interprets. ("Jewish Song Book," pp. 245-251). It breathes the sweetness of human and divine reconciliation when, after the long hours of heart searching, the sun calmly sets on chastened spirits.

The characteristic tune of Succoth (see pages 22-26) is the Lulav melody which, in its association and rhythm, speaks the waving of the palm branches. To it, is set the festival response: Hodu, page 108.

From the ritual of Simchath Torah, we select music for the outstanding feature of the day's service: the processional about the Synagogue with the Torah Scrolls, expressive of Israel's joyous gratitude for receiving the Law. (See pages 26-27.) (Onnoh, page 109.)

Prayer and Song

To the Jews of Western Europe and America, the tune associated with Chanukah (see pp. 29-33) is: Mooz Tzur—Rock of Ages, page 110. Special insertions in the prayers of the regular services occurring during the eight days of the Feast of Lights, mark this celebration. For the chanting of the blessings, for the kindling of the Chanukah lights, see the "Jewish Song Book," page 115.

The half holiday of Purim (see pp. 34-37) brings into the Old Synagogue and into many private homes, the chanting of the Megillah. Many unique musical phrases have grown into this colorful chant. Purim's spirit of jollification, of gift-giving, masking, dancing, and the enjoying of special dainties, finds expression in the light-hearted Purim Song, p. 112.

For the Pesach Synagogue services, the music is that of the Three Festivals (Succoth, Pesach, Shabuoth), with the addition in Western Europe and America, of the melody distinctly associated with Passover: Addir hu—God of Might, page 114. Some of the loveliest music of Pesach (see pp. 38-44) is that for the Seder ("Jewish Song Book," pages 149, 150, 152, 154, 172-4).

Shabuoth (see pp. 47-48) interprets its service through the music of the Three Festivals. It adds the Akdomus tune. This is derived from the Psalm mode which may date back as far as Temple times. It is one of the oldest tunes that we have. We give the arrangement of it for the processional of the Confirmants: Boruch haboh, page 115. Well suited hymns for the day are Covenant of Sinai, "Jewish Song Book," p. 164, Confirmation Hymn, "Jewish Song Book," p. 264, and Consecration, p. 166.

MINYAN

An ancient custom in Israel requires a quorum of ten adult Jews (see Bar Mitzvah) for public worship. In the Reform Synagogue, women too are counted to the Minyan.

THE FIRST PRINTED JEWISH MUSIC
from Jewish Music by Idelsohn

MUSIC

Veshomeru

Based on Adonoy Moloch mode
A. Z. IDELSOHN

mf Con animo Recitando

Ve - sho - me - ru ve - ne yis - ro - el es ha - sha -

The first system of musical notation consists of three staves. The top staff is in treble clef with a key signature of one flat (Bb) and a 4/4 time signature. It contains a melody with eighth and quarter notes, including triplet markings over the words 'me-ru' and 'sha-'. The middle staff is in treble clef and contains chords and rests. The bottom staff is in bass clef and contains a bass line with eighth and quarter notes, also featuring a triplet marking over the word 'sha-'. The lyrics 'Ve - sho - me - ru ve - ne yis - ro - el es ha - sha -' are written below the top staff.

bos, la - a - sos es ha - sha - bos le -

The second system of musical notation consists of three staves. The top staff continues the melody from the first system, ending with a half note. The middle staff contains chords and rests. The bottom staff contains a bass line. The lyrics 'bos, la - a - sos es ha - sha - bos le -' are written below the top staff.

do - ro - som be - ris o -

The third system of musical notation consists of three staves. The top staff continues the melody, ending with a half note. The middle staff contains chords and rests. The bottom staff contains a bass line. The lyrics 'do - ro - som be - ris o -' are written below the top staff.

Prayer and Song

lom. be - ni u - ven be - ne yis - ro-

rit.

el os hi le o - lom.

Ceremonies of Judaism

Boruch

(Ovos)

Traditional

accord. to arr. of S. Naumbourg

Lento

mp SOLO

Bo - ruch at - toh a - do - noy, e - lo -

he - nu ve - lo - he... a - vo - se - nu, e -

lo - he av - ro - hom, e - lo - he yitz -

Prayer and Song

chok ve-lo-he... ya-a-a

kov, ho-el... ha-go-dol... ha-gi-

bor ve-ha-no-roh, el... el-yon, go-

Ceremonies of Judaism

mel cha-so-dim to - - vim ve-ko-ne ha-

This system consists of three staves. The top staff is a vocal line in G major (one sharp) with a treble clef, featuring eighth and quarter notes with triplet markings. The middle staff is a piano accompaniment in G major with a treble clef, using chords and eighth notes. The bottom staff is a piano accompaniment in G major with a bass clef, featuring eighth and quarter notes with triplet markings.

kol ve - zo - cher chas-de o - vos, ve-zo-

This system consists of three staves. The top staff is a vocal line in G major with a treble clef, featuring eighth and quarter notes with triplet markings. The middle staff is a piano accompaniment in G major with a treble clef, using chords and eighth notes with triplet markings. The bottom staff is a piano accompaniment in G major with a bass clef, featuring eighth and quarter notes with triplet markings.

cher... chas - de..... o - .

This system consists of three staves. The top staff is a vocal line in G major with a treble clef, featuring eighth and quarter notes with triplet markings. The middle staff is a piano accompaniment in G major with a treble clef, using chords and eighth notes with triplet markings. The bottom staff is a piano accompaniment in G major with a bass clef, featuring eighth and quarter notes with triplet markings.

Prayer and Song

vos, u-me-vi *R. R. ge-u - loh liv - ne ve-ne O. R. go - el

hem le - ma - - - -

an she-mo, le-ma-an sh'mo be - a - ha - voh.

*R. R. Reform Ritual O. R. Orthodox Ritual

Ceremonies of Judaism

Vehakohanim

Traditional

Moderato con moto

mf

1. Ve - ha - ko - ha-nim ve - ho - om..... ho-

2. Me - fo - rosh yo - tze..... mi-

3. Ho - yu kor - im uom - dim bo - a - - zo - roh, ke - she-

pi ko - hen go - dol, bi - ke-

- - mish - ta - - cha - vim u - mishrall.

ho - yu shom - im es ha - shem,

du - shoh bik - du - shoh uv - to - ho - roh,

ta - cha - vim ho - yu ko - re - im,

Prayer and Song

es ha-shem, es ha - shem es ha - shem uv - to-ho-roh, bik - du - shoh uv - to-ho-roh,
 ko - re-im, ko - re - im ko - re - im,

ha - nich - bod, ha - - nich - bod
 bik - du - shoh uv - - to - ho - roh,
 u-mish - ta-cha-vim ve - - nof - - lim

ve - ha - no-roh ve-ha - no - - roh.
 bik - du-shoh u - ve - to - ho - roh.
 ve - nof - lim al pe - ne - hem. ve - o-me-rim

bo-ruch shem ke-vod mal-chu-so le - o - lom vo - ed.

Ceremonies of Judaism

Hodu

(for Succos)

Traditional

Andante

Ho - du la - do - noy
yo - mar noh

The first system of musical notation for 'Hodu' is in 4/4 time, marked 'Andante'. It features a treble and bass staff. The melody is in B-flat major (two flats). The lyrics are 'Ho - du la - do - noy' on the treble staff and 'yo - mar noh' on the bass staff.

ki tov, ki le-o-
yis - ro - el ki le-o-

The second system of musical notation continues the melody. The lyrics are 'ki tov, ki le-o-' on the treble staff and 'yis - ro - el ki le-o-' on the bass staff.

lom— chas - do. yo - mar noh lom— chas - do. yom - ru noh yir-

The third system of musical notation continues the melody. The lyrics are 'lom— chas - do. yo - mar noh' on the treble staff and 'lom— chas - do. yom - ru noh yir-' on the bass staff.

ves a - ha - ron ki le-o - lom chas - do.
e a - do - noy ki le-o - lom chas - do.

The fourth system of musical notation concludes the piece. The lyrics are 'ves a - ha - ron ki le-o - lom chas - do.' on the treble staff and 'e a - do - noy ki le-o - lom chas - do.' on the bass staff.

Prayer and Song

Onnoh

(during the procession)

Moderato

Based on traditional mode

UNISON OR CHOIR

1. O - noh a - do - noy ho - shi-oh noh, o - noh a -
 2. Elo - he ho - ru - chos ho - shi-oh noh, bo - chen le -
 3. Zach ve-yo- shor ho - shi-oh noh cho - mel
 4. Yode-ah macha-sho-vos ho - shi-oh noh ka - bir ve - do - noy hatz - li - choh noh, o - noh a - do - vo - vos hatz - li - choh noh, go - el cho - da - lim hatz - li - choh noh, tov u - me - no - or hatz - li - choh noh, lo - vesh tze - do -

noy a - ne - nu ve - yom kor - e - nu.
 zok a - ne - nu ve - yom kor - e - nu.
 tiv a - ne - nu ve - yom kor - e - nu.
 kos a - ne - nu ve - yom kor - e - nu.

Ceremonies of Judaism

Rock of Ages

Chanukah Hymn

Translated from the German
of Leopold Stein by M. Jastrow
and G. Gottheil

Traditional

f Maestoso

1. Rock of A - ges, let our song Praise Thy sav - ing
2. Kindling new the ho - ly lamps, Priests approved in
3. Chil-dren of the martyr-race, Wheth-er free or pow - er; Thou, a-midst the rag - ing foes, suf-fer - ing, Pur - i - fied the na - tion's shrine,

fet - tered, Wake the ech - oes of the songs

Wast our shel - t'ring tow - er. Fu - rious they as - Brought to God their of - fer - ing. And His courts sur -
Where ye may be scat - tered! Yours the mes - sage

Prayer and Song

sailed us, But Thy arm a - vailed us, And Thy word round-ing Hear, in joy a - bound - ing, Hap-py throngs cheer-ing, That the time is near - ing Which shall see Broke their sword, When our own strength failed us.

Sing - ing songs Far and wide re - sound - ing.
All men free, Ty-rants dis - ap - pear - ing.

Ceremonies of Judaism

Purim Song

A. IRMA COHON

Based on Chassidic Motives
A. Z. IDELSOHN

Allegro mf

1. Pu - rim day is our re - joic - ing, All our carefree
2. Year - ly in our joy 'tis pleas - ant, Each to send his glad - ness voic - ing On - ly this day's whol - ly bright - Pu - rim pres - ent, And since saved from Haman's rod,

Filled to brimming with de - light. Chanting the Me - gil - la,
Raise our song of thanks to God. In the friendly cir - cle,

mp

Prayer and Song

twirling homendreher, O - pen heart-ed Sha-lach-mo-nos, be a Pu-rim player, Munch-ing tast-y ho-men-tash-en,

1
our fes-tiv-i-ties en - hance, 2 join the mask and dance.

The musical score is written for voice and piano. The key signature has two flats (B-flat and E-flat), and the time signature is 4/4. The melody is in the treble clef, and the piano accompaniment is in the bass clef. The lyrics are written below the vocal line. The score includes a first ending (marked '1') and a second ending (marked '2').

Addir hu—God of Might

English by G. Gottheil

Traditional

mf Andante. Joyously

Ad-dir hu, ad-dir hu, yiv-ne be-so be-ko-rov,
 1. God of might, God of right, Thee we give all glo-ry;
 2. Now as erst, when Thou first Mad'st the proc-la-ma-tion,
 3. Be with all who in thrall To their task are driv-en;

bim-he-roh. bim-he-roh be-yo-me-nu be-ko-rov.
 Thine all praise in these days As in a-ges hoar-y,
 Warning loud ev'-ry proud, Ev'-ry ty-rant na-tion,
 In Thy power speed the hour When their chains are riv-en;

el be-ne, el be-ne, be-ne ves-choh be-ko-rov.
 When we hear, year by year, Freedom's wondrous sto-ry.
 We, Thy fame still proclaim, Bowed in ad-o-ra-tion.
 Earth a-round will re-sound Joy-ful hymns to heav-en.

Prayer and Song

Boruch haboh

(For confirmation)

Utilizing traditional mode

A. Z. IDELSOHN

mf Moderato

Bo-ruch ha-boh be-shem a-do-noy be-rach-nu-chem mi-bes a-do-

The first system of music is written in G major (one sharp) and 4/4 time. It consists of a treble and bass staff. The melody is in a traditional mode, with a mix of eighth and quarter notes. The lyrics are written below the treble staff.

noy, e - li a - toh ve - o - de - koh, e-lo-hay a-ro - me-

The second system continues the melody. It features a treble and bass staff. The lyrics are written below the treble staff. The tempo and dynamics are marked f con moto.

me - koh. ho - du . la - do - noy ki tov, ki le-

The third system continues the melody. It features a treble and bass staff. The lyrics are written below the treble staff. The tempo and dynamics are marked mf.

o - lom cha - se - do. ki le - o - lom cha - se - do.

The fourth system concludes the piece. It features a treble and bass staff. The lyrics are written below the treble staff. The tempo and dynamics are marked mp rit. and p.

V

CEREMONIES
FOR SPECIAL OCCASIONS

Just as week-days and festivals are spiced with ceremonies (which are symbols of ideals), so also are special events in the life of the Jew.

BRITH MILAH

THE Jewish boy is brought into a covenant with God, through the ceremony of circumcision (Brith Milah). Genesis 17 relates that our Patriarch Abraham first conceived of circumcision as a covenant of himself and his children with their God. The custom was known to the ancient world long before Abraham; but Abraham, in adopting it, interpreted it as a sign of a divine covenant. The custom did not immediately become firmly established in Israel. In Joshua 5:2-9, we read that in the time of Israel's sojourn in the desert, no circumcision was performed. Yet during the following centuries, the rite became so deeply rooted in Jewish tradition that, when Antiochus Epiphanes issued the prohibition against it (see Chanukah), Jews preferred to die rather than neglect it. It came to be the first condition made of any male proselyte to Judaism.

According to Jewish law, it is with the father or mother that the obligation rests, to have the boy circumcised. In the case of an orphan, the duty to provide for the rite, is the rabbi's. Without the consent of the mother, the father has no right to order the circumcision of his son. In case of the loss of two sons of the same mother, through circumcision, the third boy is exempt from the ceremonial obligation, because of the probability that the children of the given woman are hereditarily physically unfitted for the operation. A boy must be circumcised on the eighth day after birth, even though that day be a Sabbath or the Day of Atonement.

No postponement is permissible except for the illness of child or mother.

The night prior to the day of the Brith Milah, is called Shalom Zachor (Peace to the Boy). It was customary for a number of people to assemble to recite Psalms and sing special songs.

The Brith Milah is usually performed in the morning; and, if possible, in the presence of the required quorum of ten men (Minyan). At the celebration, the child is handed over from the mother to a man who carries the infant to the room where the ceremony is performed. This person is called "god-father" (in German Gott-Vater) which name in Yiddish, became Kwater. The man who is honored with the privilege of holding the child during the operation is known as Sandik (from the Greek syndikos—counsel). In the old communities, before the ceremony is performed, the child is laid upon the "Chair of Elijah," a special chair owned by the Synagogue and brought from there for the occasion. This custom is based upon a legend that the Prophet Elijah once complained to God that Israel was neglecting His covenant (1 Kings 19:10-14). In consequence of this accusation, God ordered him to be present at each circumcision, that he may witness Israel's loyalty to this covenant.

The operator is called by the Hebrew term Mohel. In times past he was generally a prominent member of the congregation who considered it a great privilege to introduce Jewish children into the sacred covenant. The average Mohel is so expert in this operation that no surgeon can compete with him in the dexterity of performance or in the safe-guarding of the life and health of the baby. A prominent surgeon is responsible for the statement that the instruments as well as the method traditionally employed,

Ceremonies for Special Occasions

surpass those of the surgeon's. The "shield" which prevents the possibility of cutting into the flesh and which has no counterpart in the apparatus of the surgeon is still errone-

CHAIR OF ELIJAH (H. U. C. Museum)

Instruments of Circumcision

1. Knife

2. Shield

3. Sponge

ously looked upon by medical men as a ceremonial rather than as the most helpful and advanced means of protecting the child. It is still sold in Hebrew book stores and not in surgical supply houses. In the method of operating, the

Ceremonies of Judaism

Mohel is at an advantage, by reason of the swiftness with which the entire operation is performed (one cut instead of the usual three of the surgeon), because he makes no stitches, and causes a minimum loss of blood.

When the child is brought in, the assemblage arises and recites aloud several Biblical passages. The Mohel lays the child on the Elijah chair, chanting the while a prayer asking that his operation be successful, and concluding with the glorification of the ceremony. The child is laid either on a small operating table or on the lap of the Sandiḳ who grasps the child's legs firmly. The Mohel recites a benediction reminding us of God's covenant with Abraham manifested through this rite. The father follows with a declaration to obey this command; and the assemblage responds: "Just as he is introduced into the covenant, so may he merit being introduced to Torah, marriage, and to good deeds." The operation and bandaging require hardly more time than do these benedictions. At the completion of his task, the Mohel recites the blessings over wine and concludes by announcing the child's name and by pronouncing a prayer for the baby and the hope that his parents may enjoy their child and may live to see him grown, a good Jew. Then the Kwater returns the infant to his mother.

Jewish art has found expression in the instruments of circumcision. The handle of the knife and the Elijah chair were elaborately carved.

In the Orient, it is customary that after the operation a banquet is served. In Europe a light repast is offered, partaking of which is considered a religious function.

MAZAL-TOV

UPON the birth of a child the stranger's question used to be "Is it a Brith-Milah or a Mazal-tov?" meaning: Is it a boy or a girl? On the first Sabbath after the girl's birth the father was called to the Synagogue platform during the reading of the Torah. The reader then announced the name of the child and concluded with a benediction for child and parents.

PIDYON HABBEN

THE "Redemption of the Son" is a ceremony for the first-born, if it be male. Among many ancient peoples the first-born of the mother, man or animal, was dedicated to the deity—either sacrificed or left at the sanctuary for sacred purposes (Exodus 13:2). Conditions modified the law by declaring (Exodus 13:12-13, Numbers 18:14-16) that the first-born of men be redeemed by the giving of a stipulated sum of money at the time when the boy is one month old. This is still practiced among Orthodox Jews, while Reform Judaism has discarded it. In case the parents are Cohanim (descendants of the priest tribe) the child is exempt from the need of redemption. The ceremony consists of the giving of five shekalim (now something like five dollars) to an Aaronite (a Cohen) who, in the presence of witnesses recites a prescribed ritual.

SHIR HAMAALOS

(or Shir Hamaaloth)

IMMEDIATELY after the birth of any child, the room in which the mother lay, used to be hung with placards inscribed with Psalm 121 and with cabalistic formulae against evil spirits. These placards took their name from the Psalm: Shir Hamaalos (Hamaaloth).

Ost und West, Vol. XII

SHIR HAMAALOS

BAR MITZVAH

(Son of Duty)

IN Jewish practice, a boy, to the age of thirteen, is considered a child. In times past, the father was—during those years of childhood—obliged to support him, to provide for his education, and to afford him the means of mastering a profession or trade. But at the age of thirteen the boy assumed religious duties and was considered an adult Jew (Aboth V:24). This change was symbolized by the son's putting on the Tefillin and in some congregations, also the Tallith; and by his being counted to a Minyan. (See page 98.)

At the present time and especially in Western countries, the Bar Mitzvah age no longer marks the end of childhood and of parental responsibility. The ceremony hence is entirely one for the strengthening of the boy's allegiance to his faith and his people, and for the encouraging of a mature attitude toward religious duties.

It is a great day in the life of a boy, on which he is introduced to his obligations as an adult Jew. The festivity is usually held on the Sabbath, even though the boy's birthday may have occurred during the week. In the Synagogue, the boy is called upon to pronounce the benediction over the Scripture. In the Orient and in Germany the boy reads from the Scroll either the entire portion of the week, or a paragraph of it, and concludes with the chanting of the Haftarah (the portion from the Prophets). In Eastern Europe the custom has been reduced to the chanting of the Haftarah only, while in American Synagogues the boys generally recite only the benedictions over the Torah. The purpose of the boy's public reading is two-fold: first to give proof of his knowledge of the Torah, and secondly to make him feel a full-fledged Jewish adult who, as such is entitled to conduct public service. After the readings, he is blessed with a special benediction, chanted by the chazzan or pronounced by the rabbi.

M. Oppenheim

BAR MITZVAH

When the service is over, the event is celebrated by the parents at home. At the domestic gathering, in the presence of the guests, the boy sometimes used to hold a discourse, called Derashah, on a religious subject.

The Bar Mitzvah ceremony which is for boys only, is substituted in most Reform Jewish practice, by the Confirmation Service, obligatory for boys and girls alike. This service occurs but once a year, on Shabuoth, irrespective of the age of the confirmant.

CHATHUNAH (Wedding)

THIS most important celebration in human life, the Jew has provided with many ceremonies. The most outstanding custom formerly preliminary to every Jewish wedding, is called Baddekenes—the covering of the hair and face of the bride. It dates far back. There are still among us women wearing the Sheitel (see page 73).

On the day of the wedding until after the marriage ceremony, both bride and groom used to fast to atone for their sins.

Music making before and after the wedding ceremony has been customary from most ancient times. It was retained even after the destruction of the Second Temple, while other music was prohibited as a sign of mourning, for the rabbis considered it essential to a wedding. The music would start long before the ceremony, both in the house of the groom and in that of the bride, lasting until all the guests were gathered (the men in the groom's house, the women in the bride's). The music makers were as a rule Jewish instrumentalists (Klezmer). They would lead the procession to the Chuppah (the marriage canopy), which used to be erected in the open air in the court of the Synagogue. First, the groom was led in procession, accompanied by the father, male relatives and guests, then the bride, accompanied by the mother and the women present.

The canopy is a reminder of the ancient tent-life of Israel. Bedouin tribes to the present day erect a special tent for the young couple, in which the bridal bed is set. In the course of cultural development, when the Jewish people came to live in substantial buildings, the Chuppah was still retained, and a mystic significance read into it. It was supposed to symbolize the canopy made of the skin of the Leviathan (a mythical fish) in which the people expected to live in Paradise.

During the procession, the bystanders showered the young couple with raisins and almonds, or with rice. These showers signify the hope for happiness and productivity. When the bride reached the Chuppah she had to walk around the bridegroom three times. Many reasons are offered for these circuits. The simplest one is that the bridegroom might assure himself of the identification of his bride. As she took her place beside the groom, the couple was draped under one

Jew. Encyc., Vol. VIII

CHUPPAH (WEDDING CEREMONY)
Marriage Scene in Galicia

Ceremonies for Special Occasions

Tallith. The parents, because they led the couple to the Chuppah (or in the case of orphans, other near relatives who assumed this role) were called Unterführers (those who lead in). The Unterführers stood at the Chuppah during the ceremony. Then the rabbi or any other respected and learned Jew would pronounce the "betrothal benediction" (Birchath Erusin) in the traditional chant. In places where the canopy is no longer accounted essential to the ceremony, often a floral canopy or arch is erected for beauty and as a link with the old custom of the Chuppah. In olden times, the ring was not known at all. Instead a coin was handed by the groom to the bride. This was a relic of the time when men bought their wives. The usage of the wedding ring was introduced in Israel as late as the eighth century C. E. Certain regulations were prescribed for the ring. It had to be smooth and round, with no marks and no stones. The bridegroom, when placing the ring on the bride's finger (formerly, the index finger of the right hand), said in Hebrew: Hare at mekudesheth li betabaath zu kedath moshe

Jew. Encyc., Vol. III
ITALIAN KETHUBAH OR BETROTHAL DEED
—1795

Ceremonies of Judaism

WEDDING RINGS

Upper—15th and 16th Century

Lower—16th and 17th Century

Ceremonies for Special Occasions

veyisrael (Be consecrated unto me through this ring, according to the law of Moses and Israel). In Western Europe and America there is frequently an exchange of rings between bride and groom.

The marriage benedictions are then pronounced. The declaration of the groom and the "wedding blessings" (Birchoth Nissuin), called the "Seven Benedictions" (Sheva berachoth) still constitute the essentials of a Jewish wedding ceremony. One of these blessings is recited over a cup of wine out of which bride and groom drink. The rabbi would then read the marriage contract (Kethubah), in its original Aramaic wording. The use of this ancient "bill of rights" has been discarded by Reform Jews. A dish was then thrown at the feet of the bridegroom. He would step on it and crush it. This custom is of early origin, and is founded on various superstitious beliefs. Later it was re-interpreted as a reminder to the young people, at the climax of their joy, of the destruction of the Temple.

The couple was then led back in procession with musical accompaniment, to the house of the parents of either the groom or bride, where the banquet (Seudah) was served. The instrumentalists would usually choose more joyous tunes for the returning from the Chuppah than for the procession to it.

In olden times, and in the Orient to the present day, the banqueting continued for an entire week. At each meal, the "wedding benedictions" are chanted, and special wedding songs are sung. In many communities such as the Yemenite, Syrian and Eastern European, a rich treasury of wedding songs has been created in Hebrew as well as in the vernacular. At the meal, much stress was laid upon the twisted bread (Challah) and the soup called "Goldene Youch."

MOURNING

WHEN the Jew faces the closing moments of his life, he utters again the watchword of his faith. At that moment a relative or the rabbi recites with him, the Shema and the confession (Viddui).

Before the days of the present municipal supervision and efficient undertaking service, when the care of the dead was left to the family and friends, the Jews were scrupulous about respectful tending and disposal of the body. A so-called Holy Society (Chevre Kadisha) existed in every community throughout the ages. Membership in it was accounted a great merit. Its task consisted in caring for the dead body, arranging the funeral, and preparing the grave. In the Middle Ages often the members of the Society faced most dangerous situations in saving the bodies of Jews killed by Gentiles, and in bringing them to burial in a Jewish cemetery. Needless to say, the services of the Chevre Kadisha were performed without remuneration.

Immediately following death, the body was laid on the floor with a light at the head and one at the feet. Usually a member of the Chevre Kadisha kept watch until the funeral. The body was washed (Hebrew: Tahara) by the members of the Society and wrapped in a white shroud (Hebrew: Tachrichim). In many cases, a man preserved his Kittel to be wrapped in, also his Tallith. In some communities, it was customary to march about the corpse seven times (Hakafoth—encirclings) while reciting a ritual. Then the body was laid into a coffin or—in some countries, especially in the Orient—on a stretcher, and carried to the cemetery.

Ceremonies for Special Occasions

Before the medical testimony of death became a governmental order, it was customary to bury the body on the day of the death, and only in case the day happened to be Sabbath or a holiday, was the funeral postponed until the next day.

The grave, according to tradition, had to be dug in conformity with given measurements and with its head-end pointing eastwards toward Jerusalem. After the body was placed into the grave, three pieces of broken pottery were laid upon the eyes and mouth, symbolizing the vanity of the eyes and mouth. A handful of Palestinian earth was laid under the head. The close relatives, at the open grave, tore their garments over the heart (to the width of four fingers (Hebrew: Keria) as a sign of sorrow.

As soon as the grave is closed, Kaddish is recited by the close relatives. This recitation the mourners repeat for eleven months at every public service. In addition a ritual is recited and the prayer for the soul of the departed (El mole rachamim) is chanted by the Chazzan or any other man present.

From the grave, the mourners (Hebrew: Avelim) return home where they are obliged to remain seven days, to sit on the floor and to walk without shoes, as signs of mourning customary in ancient Israel. During these seven days (Hebrew: Shiva), public services are held at the house of the departed one, and only on Sabbath the mourners go to the Synagogue. There, after the chanting of Lecha dodi, the Chazzan, accompanied by the rabbi meets the mourners at the entrance of the Synagogue, saying: "May God comfort you together with the mourners of Zion." During the eleven months, the mourners are expected to be mindful of their loss and to conduct themselves accordingly.

Ceremonies of Judaism

In America, the regulations of the Board of Health and the equipment and service of the undertakers, leave to the family of the deceased only the providing of the burial place and the ritual of the interment. A short service is held at the home, if the body is brought back there from the embalmer's. Sometimes this service takes place at the chapel of the undertaker's or the chapel at the cemetery. In the case of a Synagogue funeral, the corpse is carried there for the service, and the ritual read in the synagogue. Sometimes—especially for a person of importance—a funeral address (Hesped) is delivered by the rabbi.

At the open grave a brief ritual is read. The coffin is lowered, the grave closed, and the Kaddish recited. Services are usually conducted at the mourner's home during the following few days—exclusive of Sabbaths and holidays.

As formerly, the mourners recite the Kaddish for a period of eleven months.

At the end of the first year, and on the same date of each succeeding year, the Yahrzeit (anniversary of the death) is observed, by reciting Kaddish at the public services in the Synagogue and by kindling a lamp or a candle—symbol of the soul of the deceased. It was customary to fast on the day of Yahrzeit and to give charity.

